THE WONDERFUL AUTOMATIC CELESTINA.

FULLY WARRANTED.

THE CELESTINA is a New Reed Instrument, constructed on the same principles as an Organ, with Full Set of Reeds and Bellows. It is automatically operated by strips of perforated paper mounted on Rollers or Spools. Each strip represents four or more tunes, and there is positively no limit to the kind, quality, or quantity of Music. It will play Hymn Tunes, Popular Airs, Sets of Quadrilles, Polkas, Waltzes, Reels and Hornpipes, with a clearness, accuracy, and a degree of execution which but few performers can equal. A mere child can play it. The Music Box and all kindred instruments are not only expensive luxuries enjoyed by a few, but they are limited to a few set tunes, and therefore soon become tiresome, and as a means of enjoyment to their owners entirely worthless. The CELESTINA, on the contrary, will play over One Thousand different tunes, and is therefore admirably adapted for singing parties, dancing parties, winter evening entertainments and educational purposes.

Simply turning the little handle or crank feeds the music strips, blows the bellows, and produces the music. The music strips pass between the rollers and over the reeds, and as they move along, the bellows are in constant operation; as the perforation in the paper comes opposite the right reed it allows the wind to pass through, causing that reed to sound, the length of the note being gauged by the style or length of the perforation in the paper. The most exquisite trills are as easily produced as a single note. Such pieces as "Listen to the Mocking Bird" are played in a manner that few organists can approach. A false note is an impossibility, and the most difficult and complicated operatic air is played as perfectly as a simple hymn; and the music produced is as melodious and sweet as in any cabinet organ.

The Case of the CELESTINA is of a neat and tasteful design, constructed of solid Black Walnut of the best grade, highly polished and decorated with exquisite designs in gold. The CELESTINA will take the place and do the work of a four-piece orchestra, and play dance music in a perfect manner. It is therefore admirably suited for Private Houses, Hotels, Lodge Rooms, Sabbath Schools, Halls, Young Men's Christian Associations, &c., &c.

Price, including Four Tunes, only FIVE GUINEAS.

PREFACE.

THE object of the Australasian Federal Directory is to facilitate intercourse, first, between the various Colonies of Australasia one with another, and secondly, between those Colonies and other countries.

The work may fairly claim to possess an interest over and above that usually attaching to directories, since it is a product of that powerful movement which is surely, if not swiftly, welding Australasia into a united nationality, and the members of the English-speaking race into one vast confederation.

It is probably safe to speak of Australasia as at once the most extensive and the richest dominion in the Southern hemisphere; and its population, though relatively small, multiplies rapidly. With the growth of its population increase the value of its soil and the aggregate of national wealth, so that it must long continue an object of interest to the traders and manufacturers of older lands. Many of these well understand the situation, and as communication becomes more rapid, are more eager to secure a share of the present and future trade with what the early navigators styled the Great South Land. They, however, find a difficulty in obtaining precisely that kind of information which the Federal Directory supplies. For though there are many useful works of reference on the Australasian colonies, and several of the larger cities have good directories of their own, there has been as yet no thoroughly national directory.

The dominion of Australasia extends from about 112° to 180° east longitude, and lies between the parallels 5° and 50° south latitude. The difficulty of gathering addresses over such an expanse is obvious; and it will readily be perceived that the magnitude of the Federal Directory is to be judged not so much by its bulk as from the circumstance that the information it contains had to be collected over a space 3000 miles long by 2000 in breadth, and that it gives the commercial, professional, official, and other important addresses of every town in Australasia from Perth to Wellington, and from Hobart to Townsville, besides those of country stores, hotels, planters, mining companies, wine-growers, and landholders, not previously published.

But if the difficulties attending the task were great, so also were the encouragements. Not only did a large number of the most eminent men in Australasia, including Her Majesty's representatives, the Governors of each of the Colonies, and many mercantile houses, welcome the Federal Directory as a work calculated to benefit both the Colonies and the Empire, but each of the Governments rendered valuable aid towards its compilation, the services of many hundreds of postal officers being given to supply addresses. Valuable records also were placed at the publisher's disposal, and nothing could exceed the general courtesy of the officials who contributed information. To give a list of all to whom the publisher is indebted in this way would be impossible; but special thanks are due in the various Colonies for very valuable assistance—in New Zealand to the Hon. Sir R. Stout, late Premier, and the Hon. Sir Julius Vogel, Postmaster-General; in Queensland to the Hon. Sir S. W. Griffith, Premier, and the Hon. J. Macdonald Paterson, late Postmaster-General; in Tasmania to the Hon. W. H. Burgess, and the Hon. J. W. Agnew, successive Premiers; in Western Australia to the Hon. J. G. Lee Steere, M.L.C., and the late Postmaster-General, Mr. Helmich; in Fiji to the Hon. W. McGregor, Colonial Secretary, and Mr. L. J. Walker, Postmaster, Suva. In the more central colonies a large portion of the addresses were also obtained from Government sources, and in addition to this a mass of information was collected by agents either resident in or specially dispatched to Adelaide, Brisbane, Hobart, Perth, Ballarat, Suva, Townsville, Dunedin, Melbourne, Sydney, and other important centres, the result being, that the Federal Directory, though of course not perfect, remains in some sort a business census of Australasia at the completion of the first century from the foundation of Sydney, the mother city.

It should be added, that the addresses originally written for this work have been superseded or supplemented within the year 1887 by fresh information expressly collected for the Federal Directory, and the greater part of the work re-written, so that the information it contains is, as a whole, more recent for each colony than in any work published up to the Centennial year, 1888. About 4000 persons in all have collected addresses specially for this work.

The review of the social development of Australasia, from the well-known hand of Mr. James Smith, will supplement the observations of distinguished visitors on that head; while the striking facts as to its commercial expansion, collected by Mr. Meaden, will be acceptable to those who have no leisure for longer narrations. But even if no such accounts as these were given, the occupation lists of the Federal Directory would of themselves be equally significant. Few more rapid transformations are noted in history than those which have been brought about within the past half-century in several of these colonies. Friends of the writer have witnessed a pitched battle between black tribes on the spot where the Melbourne University, with its handsome group of affiliated colleges, now stands. Forests of eucalypts and acacias have disappeared before towns of canvas, which in turn have been replaced by substantial cities, more than one of which now counts its inhabitants by hundreds of thousands. The energy of a great colonizing race, acting under exceptionally favourable conditions, has accomplished these rapid changes. The present state of Australasia can be as well seen from bare lists of the occupations of its inhabitants as from description. Thus in addition to thousands of enterprising merchants, skilled artificers, owners of flocks, herds, mines, and vineyards, the Federal Directory accounts for four flourishing universities, with over 8000 schools, showing education to be almost universal. The addresses of 3200 clergy, furnished by bishops and registrars, prove that religion has a strong hold on the people. Then there is a roll of 1800 registered physicians, many of whom have been trained in the colonies; and a bar of 3000 members, some of whose most eminent representatives would do no discredit to the highest tribunals of the mother country. There is again a press list of nearly 800 distinct journals and periodicals, while upwards of 1000 publishers and booksellers diffuse literature over town and country. Indeed the Federal Directory shows that almost every phase of civilization known to older lands has its counterpart in districts which two generations back were unexplored wilderness.

Looking at all this from a commercial standpoint, and weighing the fact that as yet only the smaller half of the Australian continent has been utilized, manufacturers will calculate the possibilities of increasing demand for their commodities in a land where labour is dear, which is to a large extent dependent on the outer world for machinery and luxuries, and which annually imports goods to the extent of £65,000,000.

The great utility of the Australasian Federal Directory will be evident to those who consider its plan. The Alphabetic Part contains in one list the names, occupations or titles and addresses of firms and persons throughout Australasia, so that, in whatever part those wanted may be located, the inquirer has but to refer to a single list instead of, as heretofore, having to consult some forty different works, and often many parts of the same book. The economy of time to busy people so effected is considerable. The initials of each colony are given after the names of places, except in case of the larger towns, the positions of which are either well known or will be found in the Federal Atlas, which has been specially prepared, under the publisher's direction, for the Federal Directory by the well-known firm of Messrs. W. & A. Keith Johnston. The numbers after the names of towns refer to the telephone exchanges.

The following contractions are employed in the Alphabetical Directory—F. for Fiji; N.G. for New Guinea; N.S.W. for New South Wales; N.I. for Norfolk Island; N.Z. for New Zealand; Q. for Queensland; S.A. for South Australia; T. for Tasmania; V. for Victoria; and W.A. for Western Australia, and N.T. for the Northern Territory.

The Classified Directory will not be less useful than the Alphabetic. Never before have the trades and professions of Australasia been grouped together in a classified form; and manufacturers and others wishing to communicate with the whole of a particular trade or profession, have found it impossible to do so in some cases, and difficult in others. Now, with a minimum of trouble, one can address the whole of any trade desired throughout the length and breadth of Australasia by means of the Federal Directory classified. The arrangements of this part of the work are new, specially adapted to the circumstances of the colonies, and have been much admired. Under each business heading, the colonies, towns, and firms come in alphabetic order, so as to be most readily accessible.

The Customs Tariffs of the various colonies are appended in alphabetical order with the most recent alterations.

The Index of Occupations is given in French, German, Spanish, and Italian, as well as in English, thus making the Directory useful to upwards of 300,000,000 of people, and enhancing its world-wide utility.

THE SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT OF AUSTRALASIA.

By JAMES SMITH.

The foundation of a new colony, or of a group of colonies, is to some extent an arrest of civilization, and a reversion to a primitive stage of development on the part of the early settlers. In many respects their position bears a certain resemblance to that of the autochthonic races at that remote epoch "when wild in woods the noble savage ran." They are brought into conflict with the forces of nature. They must fell the forest, break up the stubborn glebe, construct roads, build themselves habitations, introduce flocks and herds, till the virgin soil, and procure the means of subsistence until the period of harvest comes round, erect farmsteads and granaries, establish wind or water-mills, bridge rivers, throw out a jetty at the port of entry for the merchandise they draw from abroad, and of shipment for the produce they send away in return. Their mission is "to subdue the earth, and replenish it," and they inherit nothing from the previous occupants of the territory. In the old country each generation comes into possession of a precious legacy bequeathed to it by many preceding generations. The labour, the skill, and the genius of departed millions have enriched and beautified the realm to an incalculable degree. Cultivation has made a garden of the rural districts; art and science have adorned the chief centres of population with cathedrals, churches, palaces, picture-galleries, museums, civic edifices, public monuments, and private habitations, which afford imposing or agreeable objects of contemplation to the eye; commercial enterprise has filled the shops and warehouses with the products and manufactures of every country on the face of the globe. And while the manifold developments of industrial activity lead to the unlimited multiplication of employments, and the minutest division of labour, the ingenuity of those whose business it is to provide amusements for the people is constantly being exercised to render these as diversified and as diverting as possible. All these things the pioneer of settlement in a new colony leaves far behind him. He relinquishes a multitude of advantages, and faces innumerable difficulties and not a few dangers. On the other hand, he brings with him the intellectual equipment of the century to which he belongs; and when he has overcome the preliminary hardships and trials of his arduous career; when he has founded a home and a family; and when his circumstances have become sufficiently prosperous to secure him ease and pleasure, he begins to think of social enjoyments, and of co-operation for local, municipal, or political objects; and the consciousness that he belongs to a community serves to modify and to hold in check the intense sentiment of individualism which previously governed his conduct.

Looking back to the early days of the Australasian colonies we find a general similarity of circumstances and conditions. A few hardy and adventurous pioneers pitch their tents on the banks of a fresh-water river as contiguous as may be to the port of disembarkation. After a while the tents are replaced by huts constructed of unhewn timber, or planks, or "wattle and dab." A blacksmith's and a wheelwright's forge, a general store, a butcher's shop, and a few private dwellings of a primitive character constitute the rudiments of a township. Land is brought under the plough; the sheep and oxen introduced by the immigrants are turned out to pasture on what is virtually an illimitable pasturage. The animals multiply very rapidly, and the annual clip of wool from the sheep, and the skins of the bullocks slain for food, furnish the settlers with an article for export which they can exchange against the commodities they are under the necessity of importing—such as tea, sugar, clothing materials, tools, implements, and household gear. By and by another vessel arrives, bringing immigrants and a small cargo of general merchandise, and the produce of the infant settlement is shipped to the mother country to meet the drafts of the local storekeeper, whose operations, in course of time, assume sufficiently large proportions to enable him to call himself a merchant. The new arrivals must be housed, and fed, and clothed; and as some of them are artisans themselves, or handicraftsmen of various denominations, they are not long before they are provided with remunerative employment, and the recently-established settlement soon wears an air of activity, and shows many signs of progress. New buildings are erected and old ones are enlarged. Instead of an irregular encampment a town is laid out, with well-defined streets crossing each other at right angles. A place of worship and a school-house are put up, and the first tentative effort is made at self-government by a committee of the principal inhabitants of the place, who concert measures for the preservation of order among themselves, and for the protection of their families against open or covert attacks by tribes of hostile aborigines. Then arises a natural desire to know something of the interior of the country. At different points of the horizon ranges of purple mountains, covered with forests to their very summits, are seen to bulk large against the azure sky. What fertile valleys may not be hidden among their sylvan recesses? What sparkling streams may not take their rise among those nameless and mysterious masses? One day a little band of horsemen, well armed, ride forth into the bush for a distance of thirty or forty miles, and find their way back to the settlement at night, where they relate their adventures to eager listeners. They have crossed large tracts of country, heavily grassed and lightly timbered, so that it presented the aspect of an English park. They traversed creeks and passed water-holes, in some of which the water appeared to be permanent; and excepting that the emu strode hastily away, and herds of kangaroos bounded across the green sward, and the wild turkey fled at their approach, and flights of white cockatoos or brilliantly plumaged parrots and parakeets occasionally whirred through the air, no living creature crossed the path of the explorers. To utilize this unoccupied and fertile country, stretching away for miles in all directions, would next become an object of serious deliberation, and eventually the settled purpose of the discoverers, some of whom would combine for the purchase of a flock of sheep or a herd of cattle, and would proceed to stock the invaded region, taking with them watch dogs, guns and ammunition, supplies of flour, tea and sugar, and erecting in a suitable position a hut eligible alike for shelter and defence. And so the first squatting station would be formed—the pioneer of an industry which has attained gigantic dimensions, and has unfolded "the potentiality of growing rich beyond the dreams of avarice." With the multiplication of flocks and herds in a climate where no artificial food is required for their sustenance, and no stalls or folds are necessary for their shelter in the winter season, still larger and larger areas of country would be explored and occupied for pastoral purposes, until the pioneers of settlement would have penetrated inland to the distance of two or three hundred miles from the coast. In the mean while, the annual clip of wool, increasing from year to year, would reach so large an aggregate that its transport and exportation would furnish employment to a large number of persons. Capacious warehouses would have to be erected for its reception at the chief port of shipment, roadside public-houses would spring up on the principal lines of traffic, and each of these would become the nucleus of a hamlet. Exceptionally rich blocks of land, suitable for agricultural purposes, would be taken up and brought under tillage, and a ready market for the produce would be found in the rapidly expanding centre of population which circumstances had designated as the future capital of the young colony. Somebody would import a printing press, and combining in his own person the functions of editor, reporter, compositor, machinist, advertisement collector, and newsman, the first weekly journal would make its appearance. A Government official, sent out for that purpose, would take charge of the political administration of the community, and would levy such customs duties as would suffice to defray the charges of conducting the government and of executing the various public works rendered indispensable by the growth of the settlement; and so soon as the growth of the place, and the ability of its inhabitants to sustain the necessary charges justified the step, municipal institutions on an elective basis would be established in the nascent city. The log hut which had served as a lock-up would be replaced by a police-court and a gaol; a town-hall would be erected; a fire brigade set on foot; a police force organized in lieu of the primitive constables and watchmen; differences of race, religion, or political opinions would lead to the formation of two parties in the community, each of which would be represented by its own newspaper; and the civic life of the settlement would enter upon that phase of its development which would conclude by its demanding and obtaining the privilege of making its own laws, administering its own finances, and ordering its own affairs.

Such, compendiously stated, has been the early history of each of the Australasian colonies. But, in two of them—Victoria and New Zealand—a wonderful impulse was communicated to their expansion in population and their economic growth by the discovery of gold in large quantities and widely distributed. It is difficult to regard so remarkable an event as any other than providential, and as specially designed to stimulate the transfer of population from the densely crowded countries of the old world to an island continent as large as Europe, and capable of receiving and sustaining millions of people in abundance and prosperity. No other magnet but gold could have drawn 336,957 people to Port Phillip, from the year 1852 to 1855 inclusive. Half the circumference of the globe had to be traversed, between three and four months were consumed in the voyage, and the adventurers were proceeding to a country of which next to nothing was known at that time in Great Britain, and nothing whatever on the Continent. Nevertheless, the dazzling reports which were published in the English papers concerning the profusion of the precious metal which was to be obtained by merely digging a few feet below the surface of the soil, sufficed to allure some hundreds of thousands of persons to cross the ocean, and try their fortunes in the new Dorado. For once those glowing reports were not exaggerated; indeed, the early history of the gold-fields reads like a romance. Numbers of men were lifted from poverty to affluence in the course of a few weeks, or even of a few days. Now and then the stroke of a pickaxe would reveal the existence of a nugget of pure gold as large as an ordinary leg of mutton, and the fortunate discoverer would find himself the possessor of a fortune of from £8,000 to £10,000. What gives these events their providential aspect is that they occurred during the first few years immediately following the demonstration of the auriferous nature of the country. All the "monster nuggets," all the rich "pockets," all the "jewellers' shops," and all the golden channels of the beds of ancient streams, were brought to light in the early days of the gold-fields. They had had the effect of making the whole world ring with the renown of their fabulous wealth—and then they ceased. Gold-mining subsided into an ordinary and unexciting employment, conducted by means of capital, machinery, and day labour at current rates of wages; and large nuggets became as rare as they had formerly been plentiful. But, in the mean time, the colonies in which nature had stored up such a vast amount of bullion in her cellarage—Victoria first, then New Zealand, and more recently Queensland—made great strides, and their material progress and social development were necessarily much more rapid than they would have been if no such extraordinary and adventitious event had occurred as the discovery of gold in such large quantities, and—in the beginning—by such easy methods, and with the use of such rude and primitive appliances as the pick and shovel and cradle of the early diggers.

With this brief sketch of the beginnings of colonial history, we may proceed to denote the social development of the British dominions in the South Pacific more methodically and in fuller detail. At the present period nothing strikes the new-comer more forcibly than the fact that there is nothing but the newness of the buildings in an Australian city, the brightness of the climate, the absence of any obtrusive poverty, and the want of antiquities, to differentiate the new country from the old, and that half a century, more or less, has sufficed to reproduce in the former nearly all that was most worthy of translation in the latter. The rapidity with which the primæval solitude has been transformed into a great city, with its cathedrals and churches, its banks and theatres, its docks and harbours, its public parks and broad thoroughfares, its railways and tram-cars, its multifarious industries, and its literary and scientific institutions, is due to that intellectual equipment, spoken of above, as being part of the outfit of those who have contributed by their skill and ability, their enterprise or their toil, to bring about these great results. The "arrest of civilization," previously referred to, was only a transitory incident; and when the preliminary difficulties of settlement had been overcome, the rate of progress went on augmenting from year to year.

Let us now deal with it under specific heads, commencing with

POLITICS.

All the Australian colonies were originally—as Western Australia and Fiji continue to be—Crown colonies. It was a condition of tutelage adapted to the infancy and childhood of a community, over whom the Governor as the representative of his Sovereign exercised almost absolute authority, tempered perhaps by the advice or the remonstrances of a Legislative Council nominated by himself, and of officers intrusted with the administration of such departments as the exigencies of the public service might render necessary to create. After a time, however, this form of government would become unpalatable to colonies which were growing in numbers, wealth, and intelligence, with startling rapidity from year to year. The population would naturally desire to manage their own affairs, make their own laws, levy and expend their own taxation, and acquire the control of the waste lands of the country. And the Imperial Government, recognizing the justice and expediency of such a change, conferred upon five of the Australian colonies a constitution, drawn up, in most instances, in conformity with their own wishes and ideas; at the same time handing over to them, by way of endowment, the whole of the unalienated territory within their respective limits—one of the most splendid gifts ever conferred upon a group of infant nations. A bicameral system of legislation was adopted by each colony, with a broad representative basis for the popular Chamber, and a restricted suffrage or nominee appointments for the other House. It is quite unnecessary to describe the modifications which these constitutions underwent, in deference to the power of public opinion, from time to time. Suffice it to say they were always in the direction of extending the franchise and causing the Legislature to become a more accurate reflection and a more complete exponent of the popular will. The government of the people, by the people, equally represented, has been the object aimed at; and, on the whole, the political institutions of the Australian colonies must be pronounced to have worked satisfactorily, and to have justified the confidence reposed in the good sense, the practical ability, and the self-control of these communities by the Imperial Parliament, when it bestowed upon them their respective constitutions. Burning questions have arisen relating to agrarian, fiscal, and educational measures, but the will of the majority has eventually prevailed, and the minority have acquiesced, after a gallant resistance, in changes they could not prevent.

MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT.

Concurrently with the political development of the colonies, there has been a municipal development even more important in its character and influence than the former. Indeed no more gratifying proof could be afforded of the Anglo-Australian's aptitude and capacity for self-government than is supplied by the municipal institutions which flourish in this part of the world; and the immense amount of good they have effected in the way of local improvements. Mistakes have been made, no doubt, and money may have been occasionally misspent by errors of judgment, or otherwise; but the corruption and jobbery which have brought corporate governments into such deep disrepute in some places are almost if not altogether unknown in these colonies, where the principles of self-government have received so wide an application, and where their practice has been attended with such beneficial results. Broadly speaking, each town or district, as soon as it reaches that stage of growth at which it feels qualified to commence a corporate life, can do so upon complying with certain formalities; and it thenceforth becomes a little imperium in imperio, electing its own municipal rulers, appointing officers, levying rates, paving, lighting, draining and improving the town, erecting such public buildings as may be required, and, where large works have to be undertaken from which posterity will reap an equal benefit with the present generation, contracting a loan for their execution on the security of the municipal revenue. In New South Wales there are fifty institutions of this kind, irrespective of the Corporation of the city of Sydney, with an aggregate revenue of £256,000; that of the metropolis being £190,000. In Victoria there are sixty cities, towns, and boroughs, and 120 shires in the enjoyment of self-government, with a total revenue—including that of the metropolis—of £1,129,000. And some idea may be formed of the value of the property within the jurisdiction of these local bodies, when we mention that in the two colonies just mentioned it reaches a total of £150,000,000 sterling. In the other colonies it bears much the same proportion to the population; and the city of Adelaide draws a revenue of £90,000, Brisbane £70,000, and Hobart £30,000 from its ratepayers. Not only is the Town-hall in each of the colonial capitals one of the most conspicuous architectural monuments of the place, but provincial cities and boroughs point with a pardonable pride to the handsome building erected for the use of the municipal parliament. In the large cities the annual election of the mayor is celebrated by a banquet to which the principal citizens are invited, and the dinners, balls, and receptions of the London Mansion House and Guildhall find their counterpart, on a necessarily smaller scale, in Sydney, Melbourne, and elsewhere; the Governor, the members of the Ministry for the time being, and any distinguished visitors who may happen to be staying in the city, partaking of the Chief Magistrate's hospitality on these occasions.

RELIGION.

In the early days of the Australian colonies the first religious services were celebrated under a tree; and the first church erected in what was then called New Holland, was constructed of wattle-trees and rafters of cabbage-palm, and roofed with slabs of rough bark. It cost £40, and was burnt down by the convicts, who resented their compulsory attendance at Divine worship. This was in 1799. A few years afterwards two churches of a more substantial character were erected, the one at Sydney and the other at Parramatta; and in 1822 a cathedral was opened in the former city. By the year 1839 the settlement could boast of twenty-three churches; and when the mother colony planted a community in Tasmania in the year 1803, and the Tasmanians, in their turn, sent an expedition to Port Phillip, and established a rudimentary township on the banks of the river Yarra, the adventurous settlers were not left long without the ministrations of religion. In the early days of the Australian colonies it was found necessary in the interests of religion and morality, and in view of the inorganic nature of society, to make provision for the maintenance, or partial maintenance, of ministers of religion of the various denominations out of the public funds; but in process of time it was discontinued. Each Church, or sect, however, was allowed to retain possession of the sites granted to it for churches, clerical residences, schools and colleges; and many of these have since become of enormous value. Deprived of State aid, and thrown upon their own resources, the religious orders had little reason to regret their complete severance from the civil power. Thanks to the strength of the voluntary principle and the liberality of the public, the whole of the Churches flourished vigorously; the Episcopalian somewhat less robustly, at first, than the others, because its members had been unaccustomed to the exercise of that principle in the mother country. But in course of time they adapted themselves to it, like their neighbours; and there are probably few English-speaking communities which make more liberal provision for the supply of their spiritual wants than the Protestants, Catholics, and Jews of Australia. Handsome churches, cathedrals, and synagogues adorn the chief cities, and many ecclesiastics of conspicuous ability and attainments have reflected lustre on the principal denominations. There is no sharply-drawn line of demarcation between Churchmen and Nonconformists. Protestant ministers of all kinds are enabled to meet and co-operate for the promotion of works of charity and beneficence, and religious animosities rarely assume the virulent character in these colonies which they sometimes do in Great Britain. Mutual knowledge engenders mutual respect, and the absence of a State Church contributes to the harmonious relations of ministers, all of whom stand in precisely the same position in the eye of the law, and in the estimation of society.

Tradition reports that nearly 1300 years ago the Gospel was first preached in Britain by St. Augustine under an oak tree between Ramsgate and Canterbury, in the county of Kent, and that thus were laid the foundations of those august institutions, the Roman Catholic and the Reformed Churches of England, which assumed such imposing dimensions after the lapse of several centuries. It was as recently as 1788 that the first religious service was held in Australia. It was also celebrated, as has just been said, like its English prototype, under the branches of a tree, and in less than a century the ecclesiastical organizations which have sprung into existence have been literally wonderful in their number and comprehensiveness, in their vigour and variety. The Church of England numbers one archbishop and eighteen prelates, and the Church of Rome five archbishops and nineteen bishops, with as many cathedrals or pro-cathedrals, in each instance, as there are sees; and it may be interesting to trace the growth and development of each of these episcopates. Originally the whole of Australasia was comprehended in the diocese of Calcutta, in so far as the first, and in that of the Mauritius, in so far as the second was concerned. A Protestant bishopric of Australia was established in 1836, just half a century ago, and in 1841 New Zealand was constituted a separate see, Tasmania in the year following, Adelaide, Melbourne, and Newcastle in 1847, Western Australia in 1857, Queensland in 1859, Goulburn in 1863, Grafton and Armidale in 1868, Bathurst in 1869, and Ballarat in 1875. In the year 1834 the first Roman Catholic bishopric in Australia was founded at Sydney; and eight years later it was found necessary to create the sees of Hobart, Adelaide, and Perth. A prelate was appointed for Melbourne in 1848, for Brisbane in 1859, Maitland in 1865, Bathurst in the same year, Goulbourn in 1866, Armidale in 1873, Ballarat and Sandhurst each in 1874, and Rockhampton in 1881. Each of these great ecclesiastical organizations has a little army of zealous dignitaries and clergymen enrolled in its ranks, and the older Church has a great number of convents and religious houses under its control.

The other religious denominations throughout the colonies have been equally active in providing for the spiritual welfare of their respective adherents, equally liberal, according to their means and numerical strength, in the erection of suitable places of worship, and in contributing to home and foreign missions. The Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Baptists, Particular Baptists, Wesleyan Methodists, Primitive Methodists, United Methodists, Moravians, Christian Brethren, German Lutherans, the Society of Friends, the New Church, Jews, Unitarians, Welsh Calvinists, Spiritualists, and members of the Salvation Army, labour energetically for the dissemination of their specific doctrines, while the Chinese have their joss-houses, and the Freethinkers their places of rendezvous. The census of 1881 gave the Roman Catholic Church 585,487 adherents, the Church of England 1,022,978, the Presbyterians 359,774, the Methodists 288,290, and the other Protestant denominations 234,452, in the whole of the Australasian colonies; while the Jews numbered 10,351. The proportion borne by each to the sum of the three bodies combined being, as stated by Mr. Hayter, to whose valuable Year-Book I am indebted for these figures, 76·18 per cent. of Protestants, 23·41 per cent. of Catholics, 0·41 per cent. of Jews. The pagan element of the population, chiefly Chinese, but including a limited number of Mahommedans, was represented by 45,970 males and 492 females, making a total of 46,462. It may be roughly estimated that there are 3000 ministers of religion of all denominations in Australasia, and that there are four times that number of churches and other buildings, regularly or occasionally used for public worship; while it will probably be within the mark to estimate the number of Sabbath Schools in the various colonies as being not less than 7000.

EDUCATION.

The first efforts of the settlers in a new colony are naturally and necessarily directed to the satisfaction of their physical wants. These are imperative in their demands, and leave but little leisure available, and but small energy unexhausted, for mental cultivation. But as children grow up around the pioneers of a future community, and as it is perceived that these children, if neglected, and allowed to continue untaught and undisciplined, will relapse into a condition of barbarism, the new-comers turn their thoughts towards procuring the means of instruction for their offspring. Some elderly woman, who has received a better education than her fellows, opens a dame-school in the primitive settlements, gathers together a dozen or a score of children, as wild as colts, with sunburnt faces, unkempt hair, and gipsy propensities, and after many conflicts with their rebellious instincts, and their impatience of confinement and restraint, succeeds in imparting to them a rudimentary knowledge of reading, writing, and arithmetic; in curbing the spirit of lawlessness by which they are animated, and in subjecting them to the rule of order and method. And so the fathers and mothers of the next generation are reclaimed from wildness and are fitted for the practical business of life. Then a schoolmaster, or a man of some education, with no particular aptitude for the rough work of a colonist's life, turns up in a shipload of emigrants, and undertakes the task of educating the elder children, and ekes out the slender income he derives from such a source by posting up the storekeeper's books in the evening, by writing letters for those neighbours who have no knowledge of caligraphy, or by doing a little land-surveying on Saturday afternoons. And dame and dominie are the precursors of the university professor, the rector of the high school, and the State school-teachers of a later epoch. For the time comes in which the Government of a colony finds it necessary to institute a system of public instruction, supported out of the public funds, because in a body politic, where none can be excluded from a voice in public affairs, it is essential that every citizen should possess a certain measure of cultivated intelligence. At first State education is established on a denominational basis; the money appropriated for purposes of public instruction being allotted pro rata according to the religious census of the population. But, in process of time, this system is superseded by one, the fundamental principles of which are that the education imparted by the State shall be gratuitous, secular, and compulsory. It is all three in Victoria, Queensland, and New Zealand; it is secular and compulsory in the other colonies; but school fees are remitted in cases where the parents of the children are too poor to pay them. There are 558,191 scholars enrolled in the primary schools of the Australasian colonies, out of an aggregate population of 3,100,000, and the average attendance is 351,022. Upwards of £2,000,000 sterling is annually expended by the various Governments on public instruction, and the cost per scholar is £5 11*s.* 10*d.*, while the cost per head of the population is 12*s.* 5*d.*; but this does not include departmental charges, and the expense of inspecting the schools. Out of every 10,000 persons in Australasia above the age of 15 years, there are 9651 who can read, and 9265 who can write.

For the higher education of the young abundant provision has been made. Sydney has its university, with three affiliated colleges and a splendid endowment. The other institutions comprise Newington College, under the control of the Wesleyan Methodist Church; the Church of England School; Ashford, Royston, Springfield, and Wrentmore Colleges; St. Ignatius College, conducted by the Jesuit Fathers; Riviere College, for ladies only; and four Convents, conducted by the Sisters of Charity, in which young ladies of the Roman Catholic denomination are received either as boarders or as day scholars. With the University of Melbourne are affiliated Trinity and Ormond Colleges and a Medical School; while the Church of England Grammar School, the Jesuits' and St. Patrick's Colleges, the School of the Christian Brothers, the Ladies' Presbyterian and Methodist Ladies' Colleges, and the Congregational College, and numerous grammar schools and private establishments of a high character provide instruction of an excellent quality for the children of the more prosperous classes. To these must be added schools of drawing and painting in connection with the National Gallery in Melbourne; schools of mines at Ballarat and Sandhurst; a College of Agriculture in process of initiation; and thirty-two schools of design, instituted in connection with a Royal Commission for promoting technological and industrial education, and communicating instruction to upwards of 3000 pupils. South Australia has its university, its Union, Prince Alfred, and Whinham Colleges; its Collegiate School of St. Peter, and its Pulteney Street School, both incorporated institutions. Queensland awaits a university, but can point with pride to its grammar schools at Brisbane, Ipswich, Maryborough, and Toowoomba, its Divinity Hall and Presbyterian College, its St. Kilian's College, and the two schools established by the Christian Brothers. The leading educational institutions in Tasmania are Christ's College, Hobart; the Hutchins and High Schools in the same city; the Church Grammar School in Launceston; and Horton College, Ross; while in Western Australia there is the High School for boys in Perth, besides the Bishop's College for boys and collegiate students, and the Bishop's College for girls, both in the capital of the colony. New Zealand is fortunate in the possession of a national university, with affiliated colleges and grammar schools in all the large towns. The examination standard of education in all the Australasian universities is as high as that of Oxford or Cambridge, while they have succeeded in attracting a staff of professors of conspicuous ability, several of whom have made their mark in English literature and science.

LITERATURE.

Literature is a plant of slow growth in young countries. For the first generation or two there is no leisure class. The new-comers have to perform, in the course of a single lifetime, what has been accomplished for their kindred in the old world by the accumulated efforts of generations. The colonist has a tabula rasa before him. Society has to be constructed from its very foundations. Men must cut down the forest, break up the soil, sow and reap, build habitations and garner-houses, and strive vigorously and continuously for the means of subsistence. Their daily life is made up of strenuous labour, and of the needful rest of deep and refreshing sleep. There is, in the infancy of a settlement, little time and less inclination for reading, and none at all for literary composition, even if the ability should be present. But as soon as the organic life of a colonial community begins to assume a definite shape, the necessity for some kind of newspaper, be it ever so meagre a record of passing events and medium for advertising wants, which cannot otherwise be made public, asserts itself, and a small manuscript Gazette passes from hand to hand, to be presently replaced by a rudely-printed fly-sheet, making its appearance weekly in the first instance, and developing eventually, perhaps, into a daily journal. The first newspaper issued in Australasia was a poor little publication of four pages small demy, badly printed on coarse paper, which saw the light on Saturday, the 5th of March, 1830, under the title of The Sydney Gazette and New South Wales Advertiser. Its editor was a West Indian Creole, named Howe, who was also printer publisher, and proprietor. Twenty-four years afterwards it expanded into a daily paper, but died in 1842. It was under the control of the Governor for the time being. Nor was it until 1824 that the censorship of the press was abolished, and an independent journal called The Australian was established by Mr. W. C. Wentworth, who afterwards became one of the foremost of Australian statesmen. Prior to this, however, namely in 1810, a paper had been started at Hobart Town, in what was then known as Van Diemen's Land, containing half a sheet of foolscap printed on both sides, under the title of The Derwent Star. These two publications, The Sydney Gazette and The Derwent Star, were the humble pioneers of what has grown to be a great and powerful institution; for there are now upwards of sixty morning and evening papers, and more than two hundred and fifty which are published once, twice, or thrice a week; besides monthly and quarterly publications, in the whole of Australasia. Of the leading journals of the various colonies, both daily and weekly, it may be confidently asserted that they have no superiors, in point of ability and enterprise, in any English-speaking community, if we except the best of the London newspapers. Such at least is the testimony of foreign visitors and critics, one of whom—a distinguished member of the French press, who visited Australia on a public mission in 1883-4—speaking of the most ably conducted paper in Paris, did not hesitate to tell his compatriots in that city that it was surpassed by an Australian journal which he singled out for special praise. On the other hand, it is only right to add that journalism constitutes the only field which is open to men of letters to exercise their talent in—certainly the only one which offers them a remuneration, however inadequate, for the productions of their brain. Periodical literature can scarcely be said to have any existence whatever. Numerous reviews and magazines have been started, have been conducted and contributed to by men of acknowledged ability; but, so far as the present writer is aware, they have all succumbed, after a more or less gallant struggle to maintain themselves, to the force of adverse circumstances. English, French, and American periodicals enjoy a large circulation in the Australasian colonies; but the local brand upon a book or a serial publication serves to discredit it in the estimation of colonial readers. Therefore authorship is at a discount, and men capable of writing works of permanent interest and value drift into journalism, supposing them to be not otherwise engaged as University professors or lecturers; and occasionally, when there are such exceptions as Dr. Hearn of Melbourne, whose Plutology, Government of England, and Aryan Household enjoy a high repute in other countries; as Professor Ponsen of Auckland, the author of Comparative Literature, in the International Scientific Series; as Professor Walter Scott, of Sydney, editor of the Fragmenta Herculanensia; as Mr. D. Syme, author of Outlines of an Industrial Science, and of Representative Government in England, and as Professors Pearson and Morris, of Melbourne, whose historical works are published in the mother country—only serve to prove the rule. A distinctively Australian or Australasian literature has yet to be created, and to all appearance lies far out in the future. But, in the mean time, this group of colonies has produced three poets—without reckoning Mr. Donett, who belongs rather to England than to New Zealand—each of whom is something more than "the singer of an idle hour." These are Mr. J. Brunton Stephens, the late Adam Lindsay Gordon, and the late Henry Kendall. They have given us poetry in the true sense of the word, combining, in various proportions, thought, feeling, expression, fancy, and imagination, with an ardent love of nature; and clothing their ideas in language which is often singularly melodious. Let us add that some of their descriptive compositions are full of local colour, while others bear the impress of that sense of loneliness and mystery, of awe and melancholy, which is experienced by all who have had much acquaintance with the awful stillness of the Australian bush, and with the solitariness of the great far-stretching plains of the interior. We may also claim one novelist, the late Marcus Clarke, the author of For the Term of His Natural Life, who had imbibed something of the spirit of Balzac and felt the influence of Poe, and who gave in his writings every indication that he possessed the gift of genius. Unfortunately, he was cut off in early life. His "leaf has perish'd in the green," and

> "The world which credits what is done
> Is cold to all that might have been."

THE FINE ARTS.

For the obvious reasons which have just been enumerated as hostile to the growth of literature in a new country, many years elapse after the foundation of a colony in Australia before a taste for the fine arts manifests itself, or before artists arise who are qualified to excite by their works an interest in either plastic or pictorial art. Sometimes a painter or sculptor of repute in the old country is tempted to try his fortune in a recently-established settlement, but he soon makes the discovery that there is no demand for the productions of the pencil of the painter or the chisel of the sculptor. This was the experience of John Glover, one of the promoters and original members of the Water-Colour Society in England, of which he was President, while he was also one of the founders of the Society of British Artists. When the first attempt was made at settling Western Australia in 1831, Glover came out there, but afterwards migrated to Tasmania, and died in Launceston in 1849, at the age of 82. He met with little encouragement in the land of his adoption, nor did the pictures of Australian scenery which he sent to England obtain a ready sale. At the time of the discovery of the gold-fields, in what was then known as the province of Port Phillip, Mr. Woolner, the sculptor, resolved upon trying his fortune in the Dorado of the South; but, fortunately for his own fame and for English art, the experiment was attended with so little success that he returned to the mother country after a brief sojourn in Melbourne. A young artist, Nicholas Chevalier by name, was allured hither from Europe about the same period, and finding little or no demand for oil paintings or water-colour drawings, accepted an engagement as draughtsman for the Melbourne Punch, a post he continued to occupy for some years. When the Duke of Edinburgh visited these colonies, he invited Mr. Chevalier to accompany him on a cruise; and the acceptance of this offer led to the artist's eventual settlement in London, where he has since painted several pictures for the Queen and other members of the Royal Family, and has been a pretty regular exhibitor at the Royal Academy. In those early days another young artist, Henry Dares, who had been a pupil of T. M. Richardson's, came out to Melbourne, and produced some water-colour drawings of considerable merit and still greater promise. His career was the reverse of fortunate, and he died in the prime of life in the Melbourne Hospital. One of the earliest landscape painters on the continent of Australia was Eugene von Guerard, son of the Court painter to the Emperor of Austria. This artist was attracted to Port Phillip by the glowing reports of its golden treasures, and repaired to Ballarat, which was at that time famous for the wonderful richness of its deposits of the precious metals. But he soon relinquished the life of a miner for the pursuit of his art as a landscape painter, and was the first to apply himself to a faithful study and conscientious interpretation—according to his method of looking at and feeling it—of Australian scenery. Nothing that he saw was overlooked, nothing imperfectly recorded, nothing impertinently introduced. He was probably most successful in depicting the fern-tree gullies, the bright skies, the lucid atmosphere, and the purple bloom of the mountains of Australia; but his style was somewhat hard and mannered. He was both industrious and fortunate; and after having filled for some years the post of teacher of painting in the National Gallery at Melbourne, M. von Guerard retired to Düsseldorf, in Germany, where he is enjoying a well-earned repose. Nearly thirty years ago a Swiss artist, M. Louis Buvelot, who had spent some time in Brazil, settled in Melbourne, where he devoted himself to landscape painting, both in oils and water-colours. He appeared to seize, as if by a happy instinct, upon the distinctive characteristics of Australian foliage, both as regards form and colour; while his treatment of the themes he selected for illustration on canvas or paper was at once poetical and realistic. The most homely and familiar objects were ennobled and idealized, without any sacrifice of truth, by his method of rendering them. An Australian landscape, it may be necessary to remind the English reader, is something sui generis, with its luminous atmosphere, its brilliant sky, its herbage vividly green at one period of the year and parched and colourless at another, its contorted trees with their ragged and leathery foliage, or its forest giants rising like vast columns at an altitude of three or four hundred feet, and crowned with a plume of leaves; its purple distances, and the soft twilight of its fern-tree cloisters. It wears no tender veil of silver-gray vapour like that which envelops, softens, and blends the features of an English scene, but is "garmented with light," like Shelley's "Witch of Atlas." And no one has looked at Australian landscapes with a more discerning eye, or revealed their specific charm with a more skilful pencil than M. Louis Buvelot, who has been recently obliged to relinquish the work he delights in through ill-health and old age. Of the other landscape artists in Australasia, the most distinguished are or have been Mr. John Gully in New Zealand, Mr. Conrad Marten in New South Wales, and Mr. Piguenitt in Tasmania; but this branch of art has been powerfully reinforced of late years by Señhor Loureiro, Signor Rolando, Mr. Julian Ashton, Mr. John Mather, Mr. Patterson, and many others; while portraiture and genre painting can boast of artists like Mr. Folingsby, Mr. Robert Dowling, Herr Kahler, and also Señhor Loureiro, who excels both in landscape and figure painting.

As far back as 1856 the writer of the present essay mooted in the leading columns of the leading journal in Melbourne the project of establishing a National Gallery in that city—the first of the kind in Australia; and he recurred to the subject in an address delivered at the first conversazione of the Victorian Society of Arts, held in the old Exhibition building on the evening of the 15th of December in the same year. At this distance of time he ventures to reproduce what he wrote in the Argus on the subject at that period:—"A few hundred pounds per annum would suffice to gradually stock and sustain a National Gallery in Victoria; and a further sum might be judiciously expended in premiums to be offered for the best painting and the best specimen of sculpture produced in the colony during each year. . . . By providing for the nurture and sustenance of the arts, we shall assist to promote the happiness, refine the tastes, increase the enjoyments, elevate the morality, and extend the reputation of our people; and we shall also be making the best preparation for the growth and expansion of those branches of manufacturing industry which will hereafter take root and flourish in Victoria, as population increases, new wants arise, and enterprise seeks for new channels into which to direct the fertilizing flow of its restless waters." In another article he advocated the foundation of a school of instruction in drawing, painting, and modelling. The project was warmly taken up by Sir Redmond Barry and other influential gentlemen, and the Legislature voted a liberal sum of money for the first-named purpose, while the second was eventually engrafted on it. Thus arose the National Gallery of Victoria, founded on the recommendation of a Royal Commission appointed in 1863, and opened to the public in 1875. It contains 115 oil paintings and 56 water-colour drawings, besides 27 marble statues and busts, and numerous casts from the antique, as well as a museum of ethnological, ornamental, and decorative objects. The pictures comprise examples of Ansdell, Beyle, Bough, Creswick, Corbould, Cope, Chevalier, E. Frère, Folingsby, Frost, Gordell, Peter Graham, Von Guerard, Herbert, Hodgson, Lee, Leader, Layraud, Long, the Patons, B. Rivière, Schenck, Vibert, Webb, Weber, Weigall, and other artists. Connected with the Gallery is a School of Art, under the direction of Mr. Folingsby, which holds an annual exhibition, and is producing some excellent work.

New South Wales anticipated Victoria by five years in the foundation of a similar institution, which did not, however, secure the recognition and aid of the State until 1873, when it obtained a small grant, which was afterwards liberally increased to £5000 per annum. The present Gallery was opened in 1880, and contains a choice collection of pictures, 83 of which are oil paintings and 76 water-colour drawings, selected with much judgment, exclusive of bronzes, marble statuary, and other works of art. The principal artists represented in the Sydney Gallery are A. Achenbach, Von Blaas, Brierley, C. Cattermole, S. Cooper, N. Chevalier, Dicksee, Dobson, Dubufe, Elmore, Copley Fielding, Fildes, Goodall, Gow, Halswelle, C. Hunter, Horsley, C. Haghe, Hayes, A. Johnstone, Sir F. Leighton, D. Law, Landelle, L. Lewis, Lucas, S. Marks, Mole, De Neuville, Robbe, Turner, Topham, Webb, and Weedon.

The National Gallery of South Australia was commenced in the year 1879 with about twenty oil paintings by British and Continental artists, selected from the Melbourne International Exhibition, including examples of F. Dicksee, Wyke Baylers, E. de Prätere, C. Tschaggeny, J. Portaels, L. Robbe, E. Kellrath, W. Roegge, and Van Starkenborg. This collection has been since augmented by works purchased in England, under the advice of Sir F. Leighton, Mr. E. J. Poynter, and J. S. Cooper, R.A.s. Attached to the Gallery is a School of Design, conducted by Mr. H. P. Gill, who was trained at South Kensington.

Irrespective of these public galleries, there are a good many private collections in the various colonies; but as it would be impossible to enumerate them all, it would be invidious to mention those only with which the writer is acquainted. It may suffice that there is a disposition on the part of the more cultivated of the prosperous classes to surround themselves with beautiful objects, and to make their homes as attractive as those of the same classes in the mother country and in the United States.

Of societies founded for the promotion of art-studies, the more prominent are the Art Society of New South Wales, founded in 1880, in which there are classes for study from the life and the antique, as well as painting and sketching classes; and the Victorian Academy of Arts, established in 1870, with like objects. Both these institutions hold annual exhibitions of oil paintings and water-colour drawings, and each has an Art Union connected with it. There are also departments of art and architecture in Sydney, under the direction of the Board of Technical Education of New South Wales.

The architects of New South Wales have formed themselves into an Institute, numbering thirty-one fellows and nine associates, who have banded together with the laudable object of disseminating information connected with their profession, promoting friendly intercourse among its members, and insuring uniformity of practice on their part. There is a similar Institute, established with like aims and objects, in Victoria. It comprises eight honorary members, fifteen fellows, sixteen members, and twenty associates. The Royal Institute of British Architects, of which Mr. W. W. Wardell is the Honorary Secretary for Australia, has three fellows and four associates resident in these colonies.

The illustrated newspapers and magazines published in Australasia have called into exercise a good many able pencils, and furnish a certain amount of scope for engravers on wood and stone. Sydney has its Sketcher and its Illustrated Sydney News, founded on the lines of the London Graphic and Illustrated News, its Bulletin and its Haynes Weekly, while the Sydney Mail and the Town and Country are likewise embellished with woodcuts. Melbourne has also its Sketcher and Illustrated Australian News, together with its Melbourne Punch and Bulletin; Adelaide its Pictorial Australian and Sketcher, and Brisbane its Sketcher and Figaro. But the illustrated publications issued in the mother country command a large sale throughout the Australasian colonies, and their extensive sale is necessarily detrimental to the circulation of their colonial imitators; while the resources at the command of the former, the wide range of subjects open to them for illustration, and the superabundance of first-class draughtsmen and engravers available in the mother country, give them exceptional advantages in competition with their Southern rivals.

PUBLIC LIBRARIES.

In each of the Australasian capitals the wise liberality of the local Legislature has founded a public library, open, as a general rule, to all comers, and permitting the freest access to the books they contain. That in Sydney was instituted in 1862, when the Assembly, on the proposition of Mr. (now Sir John) Robertson, appropriated £25,000 for its establishment. But it was not until seven years afterwards that any active steps were taken for giving practical effect to this vote. Recently it was resolved to expend £95,000 on the erection of a suitable building to contain the 68,500 volumes accumulated in the edifice now occupied by the Free Public Library, in Bent-street; but the new structure is in a fair way to its completion. Upwards of 165,000 persons visited the institution during the year 1885; and its privileges are available on Sundays as well as on week-days. The Mechanics' School of Arts circulates about 40,000 volumes per annum, and there are eighty-one mechanics' institutes in the country districts, owning 80,000 volumes.

The Melbourne Public Library was founded in the year 1853, mainly owing to the zeal and energy of Mr. Justice, afterwards Sir Redmond Barry. At one time the Legislature of Victoria voted £10,000 for building purposes, and £3000 for the purchase of books. Similar amounts were voted in the succeeding year, when the chief foundation-stone of the present edifice was laid by Sir Charles Hotham, the then Governor of the colony. In 1859 his successor, Sir Henry Barkly, opened that portion of the building known as the Queen's Reading Room; and ten years later an act of the local Legislature placed the institution, and the museums and art galleries connected with it, under the government of an incorporated trust. Altogether a sum falling but little short of a quarter of a million sterling has been expended on the structure and in the purchase of books; three-fifths of the outlay having been incurred for the former, and two-fifths for the latter purpose. The library now contains upwards of 105,000 volumes, without reckoning pamphlets and serials; and it is annually visited by 300,000 persons, the number of volumes taken down from the shelves for their use exceeding 100,000 per annum. Connected with the Public Library are about forty free libraries and mechanics' institutes in the country districts, which receive from 100 to 300 volumes each per annum as temporary loans, so that there is a continual circulation of literature throughout the colony from the central institution.

A similar system is pursued in South Australia, where the Public Library in Adelaide, which has received upwards of £61,000 in the shape of grants from the Government, and contains 22,000 volumes, circulates, in addition, 3500 volumes among the numerous suburban and country institutes, 113 in number, and possessing 100,000 volumes, upon which sums of money have been bestowed by the State exceeding in the aggregate £64,000. And here it may be advantageously remarked, that throughout the whole of the Australasian colonies there is scarcely a township of any importance that does not contain an athenæum, mechanics' institute, or reading-room, with which a free library is usually combined. In every organized community there are thus three centres of intelligence, and three educational agencies at work—the Church (using that word in its most comprehensive sense), the schoolhouse, and the news-room and library; to which must be added, wherever the population is sufficiently numerous to support one or more newspapers, the press.

Queensland contains a free library, a mechanics' institute, and three miners' institutes, partly supported by the State, which has appropriated upwards of £40,000 to these objects, and partly by the subscriptions of their members. These institutions contain 50,000 volumes of books.

In Perth, the capital of Western Australia, the Swan River Mechanics' Institute contains a library of more than 5000 volumes, together with a reading-room and museum; the former open daily, and the latter twice a week.

A mechanics' institute in Hobart, Tasmania, contains 11,000 volumes, and the library of the Christian Young Men's Association numbers 1400, while the Public Library in Macquarie Street contains a large and varied collection of books. There is also a mechanics' institute in Launceston, the capital of the northern districts of the island.

There are no less than 354 public libraries, mechanics' institutes, and other literary and scientific institutions in the colony of New Zealand, with 12,868 members, and libraries aggregating close upon 200,000 volumes. They possess an income of £14,000 per annum, and receive a yearly subsidy of £6000 from the Government. Five of these institutions are free public libraries, containing in the whole 22,718 books.

Mention must also be made of the Parliament Libraries in each of the Australasian colonies. Some of these are of exceptional magnitude and value, and are yearly augmented by liberal legislative votes. Each of the Universities and the Supreme Courts has also its own library; and the various scientific societies have likewise special collections, formed by purchase and by exchange with similar associations in other parts of the world.

Circulating libraries have been established in the chief centres of population, and one of these, that of Mr. S. Mullen, is of such an extensive nature that it has come to be known as the "Melbourne Mudie's." Large private collections have been formed, and on two occasions as many as 10,000 volumes have been brought to the hammer, consequent upon the death of the gentlemen by whom they had been accumulated. Nor is there probably any part of her Majesty's dominions into which a greater number of books and periodicals are annually imported—regard being had to the number of the population—than into the Australasian colonies. It may suffice to adduce those of the two most populous members of the group as an illustration of the magnitude of the demand for literature. New South Wales, with a population little short of a million, received books and other publications of the value of £218,640 in the course of the year 1884; and Victoria, with a population slightly exceeding a million, received during the same period printed matter of the value of £248,216; but from these figures must be deducted the value of those re-exported to the other colonies, which would give £151,747 as the total of the purchases of New South Wales for home use, £161,163 as that of those of Victoria. Indeed the magnitude and growing importance of the colonial book-market is being recognized by some of the great London publishing houses, and special editions of many copyright works by living authors have been issued at reduced prices for circulation in Australia exclusively. Of some of these the numbers sold have amounted to several thousands. One firm, that of Macmillan and Co., has recently put forth the first five-and-twenty volumes of a "Colonial Library," comprising works of fiction, books of travel, biographies, essays, and general literature, by writers of acknowledged eminence, at a price so low as to bring them within the reach of the day-labourer, while the typographical quality of the books is such as to recommend them to the favour of the most fastidious collector. Other publishers, there can be very little doubt, will not be slow to follow this new departure; and the result will be that in process of time a stream of the best literature of the present day will flow hitherward, and that a choice collection of good books, varying in number with the means of the purchaser, will form part of the "plenishing" of every household. And it must be remembered that the day is not far distant when a person without some education will be a rarity in the Australasian colonies, for at the present time, with a population of 3,000,000 in round numbers, there are nearly 600,000 children on the school-rolls of the various components of this group of British dependencies. Thus there passes into the adult population year by year a fresh accession of young people educated up to a fairly high standard, and imbued, it may be believed, with a taste for reading acquired in various schools, the only counteracting agency at work being the extreme, or, as some consider it, the excessive fondness of the rising generation for all descriptions of out-door sports, which is not often compatible, it is alleged, with light reading, much less with serious study. But the climate of Australasia, or at any rate of so much of it as lies outside of the tropics, offers special inducements and attractions for athletic exercises, and we must accept the situation with all its consequences.

SCIENCE.

It is creditable to the intelligence and forethought of the Governments of the various colonies that, at a comparatively early period, they took steps for the promotion of the study of the natural sciences, by the establishment of Observatories, Botanical Gardens, and Museums of Natural History. New South Wales, as the mother colony, vigorously led the way; although, in this case, it is due to the memory of Governor Sir Thomas Brisbane to state that the first Observatory founded in Australia owed its origin to his private purse. In 1821 a temporary structure was erected in the Domain at Parramatta, and furnished with the necessary instruments for observing the heavens, under the direction of a competent astronomer named Rumker. He was succeeded by his assistant, Mr. Dunlop, upon whom was bestowed the gold medal of the Royal Astronomical Society of England, for certain of his stellar researches. Subsequently the instruments were purchased by the Government. In 1856 the Observatory was removed to Sydney, and a vote of £7000 was granted by the Legislature for the erection of a suitable building. Mr. Dunlop having died in 1848, the Astronomer Royal of England was requested to select a successor to that gentleman, and chose the Rev. W. Scott for that purpose. He resigned in 1862, and was succeeded by Mr. Smalley, at whose death, in 1870, Mr. H. C. Russell, the present occupant of the office, and previously assistant astronomer, obtained the appointment. The Observatory is in telegraphic communication with ninety-five meteorological stations in various parts of the continent, in Tasmania, and in New Zealand, and thus the requisite data are obtained for the preparation of a daily weather map, copies of which are transmitted to the principal observatories in every civilized country in the world. There are also not less than 400 meteorological stations in New South Wales alone, where observations are made and recorded, and forwarded once a month to the central Observatory in Sydney, and thus a mass of valuable information is obtained and preserved with respect to the annual rainfall, the prevalent direction of certain winds, the fluctuations of the seasons, and climatic phenomena generally.

There is also a private observatory at Windsor, New South Wales, erected and maintained at the expense of Mr. John Tebbatt, F.R.A.S., an enthusiastic votary of astronomical science, who has furnished it with some excellent instruments, and has accumulated a valuable library. Mr. Tebbatt's is an institution, it may be added, which has obtained recognition at the hands of the editors of some of the most important publications of an annual character relating to astronomy in Europe and America; and much excellent work has been performed by him in this, his own, observatory.

In the colony of Victoria the first observatory was established by the Government at Williamstown in 1853, under the superintendence of Mr. R. L. I. Ellery, who still continues his labours as the head of the establishment in the quarters to which it was removed in 1863. There was also combined with it, at the latter epoch, the meteorological observatory, which had previously been conducted by Professor Neumayer, the distinguished savant, now resident at Hamburgh. In 1869 the Melbourne Observatory was equipped, at an outlay of £10,000, with what was then the largest telescope, with one exception, in the world, having a four-feet reflector and an eight-inch refractor. A fine transit circle, with a telescope eight inches in diameter, and a splendid collection of instruments and apparatus, including a photo-heliograph, for taking daily photographs of the sun, add to the completeness of the equipment. The Melbourne Observatory is in connection, like the kindred institution in Sydney, with the other observatories of Australasia, and with 186 meteorological stations in Victoria. A daily forecast of the weather is supplied to the three morning papers; and by means of an ingenious combination of self-registering instruments, the more or less electrical condition of the atmosphere, the fluctuations of the currents of terrestrial magnetism, the force and direction of the winds, the varying dryness and moisture of the air, &c., write their own diaries, as it were, and thus quite a library of information of the most authentic and, indeed, infallible character is patiently and continuously gathered together.

The Observatory at Hobart, the capital of Tasmania, dates from the year 1841, when Captain Kay took the direction of it, and continued to do so until the end of 1854. Mr. Francis Abbott, F.R.A.S., then took up the work, and carried it on, at his own expense, until 1880. Then occurred an unfortunate hiatus in the observations, which were resumed by Commander Short in February, 1882. They are, however, meteorological only. The Observatory is in communication with forty stations at which records of the rainfall are kept.

In South Australia the Observatory is as yet, to use the words of Mr. Charles Todd, C.M.G., F.R.A.S., "but a very modest and unpretending institution, presided over by the Government Astronomer, who is also Postmaster-General and Superintendent of Telegraphs. . . . Until recently its operations were chiefly confined to meteorology, but advantage was taken of the transit of Venus, in 1874, to procure a fine ten-feet equatorial, by Cooke and Son, of York." Since then there have been added to the Observatory a universal automatic sixprism spectroscope by Browning, and a transit circle by Troughton and Simms, with a clear aperture of six inches and a focal length of seven feet. Meteorological stations have been established at fourteen points, the most northerly of which is separated from the most southerly by nearly twenty-six degrees of latitude; while the most easterly is twelve degrees of longitude apart from the most westerly. There are also 270 places at which the rainfall is carefully noted.

At Perth, in Western Australia, the Observatory, founded in 1875, is meteorological only. It is furnished with some excellent instruments for that purpose, and is in communication with twelve second-class stations; the area of country embraced by their observations being a very extensive one, as will be seen by the following statement:—

Extreme northerly station, 17° 18′ south latitude.
Extreme southerly „ 35° 02′ „
Extreme easterly „ 114° 00′ east longitude.
Extreme westerly „ 144° 36′ „

In Brisbane, Queensland, there is an astronomical and meteorological observatory under the superintendence of Mr. E. Macdonnell. It has been provided with an equatorial telescope, and a good transit instrument of thirty inches focal length. Connected with the institution are eight first-class stations, where observations are made three times every day, and 123 stations at which the rainfall is noted and recorded.

We have the authority of Dr. Hector for the statement that meteorological observations have been made in New Zealand ever since the foundation of the colony, but that it was not until the year 1859 that systematic observations were undertaken by a department established by Government. At first eleven stations were instituted, but these have been since augmented to thirty-seven. Each is fitted with the necessary instruments for observing the direction of the wind, atmospheric pressure, temperature, humidity, and general state of the weather. A daily forecast is made, and the nature of the weather which is being experienced in New Zealand is known on the same afternoon in Sydney, Melbourne, and Adelaide. It may be interesting to add that upwards of eighty-seven per cent. of the forecasts made in New Zealand with respect to the direction of the wind, seventy-nine per cent. with respect to the barometer movement, and seventy-four per cent. with respect to the sea-movement have been verified.

The Australasian colonies have been liberal in their expenditure for the promotion of botanical science, and fortunate in securing the co-operation of men of eminence to superintend the gardens and collections which have been formed in the various capitals. Baron von Mueller in Melbourne, and Dr. R. Schomburgk in Adelaide, enjoy a European reputation; while the names of Mr. Charles Moore, F.L.S., in Sydney, and of Mr. W. R. Guilfoyle, F.L.S., Director of the Melbourne Botanic Gardens, are held in high esteem by all who are acquainted with the services they have rendered to the science with which they are more especially identified. Of the Gardens in each of the cities named, as well as of those in Hobart and Brisbane, it is enough to say that they command the admiration of every visitor to the colonies in which they are respectively situated. Those of Sydney enjoy the advantage of age—relatively speaking—and of an exceptionally beautiful situation, namely on the edge of what is confessedly one of the loveliest harbours in the world, that of Port Jackson. Their crescent-shaped outline embraces the waters of Farm Cove. Behind them is the Inner Domain; and they are separated from another cove by the pleasure-grounds attached to Government House on the one side, and from Woolloomooloo Bay by a narrow and picturesque peninsula on the other. Mingled with the flora of Europe are the plants of tropical and semi-tropical regions; and every visitor from the Old World pays a willing tribute of admiration to the rich and varied character of the vegetation which meets his eye in this enchanted spot. "One finds there," writes M. D. Charnay, who came out to Australia in fulfilment of a mission intrusted to him by the Minister of Public Instruction in Paris, in the year 1878, "orchids of every description, cactuses and yuccas, tree ferns, and the whole of the palm tribe; the arancarias of Norfolk Island and the bunyas of Queensland. One meets with the anona of Mexico, the mangoustan of Singapore, and the tanguin of Madagascar. There are clumps of trees composed of the dammaras of New Caledonia, the oaks of the North, the olives of Spain, and the palm trees of Ceylon. I perceive the trees of Judæa sprinkling the earth with their rosy petals, groups of azaleas and rhododendrons, with borders of veronica covered with bluish berries; in a word, all shrubs and all flowers." In the orchid house is a valuable collection of these remarkable plants, while those of equatorial regions flourish, like the magnificent Victoria Regia, under glass. A lecture-hall, library, seed-room, and nursery form part of the appurtenances of these Gardens, which are only a few minutes' walk from the heart of the city, and constitute a delightful place of resort for its inhabitants, who have quite an embarras de richesses in this respect; for the harbour abounds with bays and inlets, wooded for the most part down to the water's edge, and presenting some of the most alluring spots for picnics and fêtes champêtres which it would be possible to imagine.

The Botanical Gardens in Melbourne are about a mile and a half from the centre of the city, and cover an area of eighty-three acres. They were laid out upwards of forty years ago, on a capital site selected by the then Governor, Mr. La Trobe. They are picturesquely uneven, and slope down to a lake occupying an area of about eight acres, and populous with wild-fowl of all descriptions. The river Yarra curves round the northern boundary of the gardens. These comprehend four lawns, a fern tree gully containing many hundreds of these graceful plants, protected by numerous umbrageous trees and shrubs, and a serpentine walk 300 yards in length, and upwards of forty botancially classified groups of plants, representing at least 500 genera and something like 2000 species. The grounds are laid out on the principles of landscape gardening adopted by the best authorities on the subject in the mother country; and the numerous rustic hedges, the summer-houses, the beds of ornamental and coloured foliage plants which enamel the lawns, the great variety of trees from all the temperate and sub-tropical regions of the earth, which give the place the appearance of an arboreal congress, and the brilliancy of the flowers during eight or nine months of the year, render these gardens attractive alike to the lover of botany and the admirer of the picturesque. Weather permitting, they are thronged with visitors on Saturday and Sunday afternoons; and their verdure is maintained during the hottest and driest of the summer months by means of a plentiful supply of water pumped up from the neighbouring river into a tank capable of holding 300,000 gallons. Great attention is paid by Mr. Guilfoyle to the introduction, raising, and propagation of plants of utilitarian value, with a view to their distribution; and systematic experiments are made in the laboratory connected with the establishment, for the purpose of testing the products of various plants, and ascertaining what extracts they will yield, or what uses their leaves, fibres, flowers, fruit, or woody substance can be applied to; while an extensive interchange of seeds, plants, and cuttings is continually taking place with botanical gardens in all parts of the civilized world.

The Botanical Gardens in Adelaide were established nearly forty years ago, and a block of land forty acres in extent, situated at the eastern end of North Terrace, was reserved for the purpose. They are now under the control of Dr. R. Schomburgh, brother of the distinguished naturalist and geographical explorer of the same name. He has had to deal with a perfectly level surface, but has succeeded in transforming what was little better than a bush paddock into a real "thing of beauty," with its lake, its fountains, conservatories, and superb Victoria Regia house. The testimony of a stranger on this point is always more valuable than that of a colonist, who may be suspected of exaggerating the good qualities of the scenes and objects with which he is familiar, and therefore the writer will quote the account given by Mr. J. A. Froude, the historian, of his visit to the Botanical Gardens in Adelaide. He says, "Whether it be the genius of the country, or some development of the sense of beauty from the general easiness of life, or the readiness of soil and climate to respond to exertion, certain it is that the public gardens in the Australian towns are the loveliest in the world, and that no cost is spared in securing the services of the most eminent horticulturists. The custodian at Adelaide, Dr. Schomburgh, has a world-wide reputation, and he is allowed free scope for his art. Ornament is more considered than profit, and flowers and flowering shrubs than fruit trees. He follows Goethe's rule in taking care of the beautiful, and leaving the useful to take care of itself." Admitted to the gardens on a Sunday morning, Mr. Froude and his friends had them all to themselves, and he thus continues, "Trees from all parts of the world are gathered together in that one spot, of the rarest kinds. The flowers with which we are familiar as exotics in our forcing-houses luxuriate as in their natural home. The oleander towers and spreads in pale pink glory. The crimson hibiscus glows among the bananas; passion-flowers—blue, purple, and scarlet—hang in careless festoons among the branches. The air is loaded with perfume from datura, orange flowers, stephanotis, and endless varieties of jessamine. Arancarias, acacia trees, Norfolk Island pines, tulip trees, &c. are dispersed over the lawns, grouped not as science would order them, but as they would be arranged by a landscape painter. Avenues of dense evergreens, the Moreton Bay fig tree conspicuous among them, invite you under their shade."

The Botanical Gardens in Hobart resemble those of Sydney as regards both maturity and picturesqueness of situation. They are on the banks of the Derwent, and in the midst of a landscape which combines both amenity and grandeur of aspect. Those of Brisbane have been aptly described as "a little paradise," in which have been assembled magnificent examples of the tropical vegetation of other continents, in addition to the trees, shrubs, and flowers which are indigenous to Queensland. Nowhere, perhaps, is the bunya to be seen in greater perfection than in the walk which skirts the river bank. But in truth every town of importance in Australasia has its Botanical Garden, and to speak of each in detail would be to presume too much on the patience of the reader. Suffice it to say that the glowing language in which Mr. Froude speaks of that which he visited at Ballarat is equally applicable to many more. "Such variety, such splendour of colour, such sweetness, such grace in the distribution of the colours collected there," are his words, "I had never found combined before, and never shall find again."

Each of the chief centres of population in the Australasian colonies has its Museum or Museums, freely accessible to the public, and containing zoological, geological, ethnological, and other collections, while the Zoological Gardens in the immediate vicinity of Melbourne promise to rival in time some of those to be met with in European cities. Of associations for the promotion of literary or scientific research, the number is somewhat considerable. New South Wales, Victoria, South Australia, and Tasmania have each their Royal Societies; and there are others of a special character which apply themselves to investigations connected with history, geology, entymology, the natural history of the fields, the writings of Shakespeare, the poems of Shelley, and other subjects of an intellectual character.

DOMESTIC ARCHITECTURE.

One of the best evidences, perhaps, of the social development of a people is that which is presented by the character of its domestic architecture. This has been admirably illustrated by M. Viollet-le-Duc in his Histoire de l'Habitation Humaine, wherein he traces the growth of our dwelling-houses from the log-hut into which the Aryan family invite Epergos and Doxi to enter, up to the stately and sumptuous palaces and mansions of the Renaissance. The whole of this history has been retraced in the Australasian colonies within a period of something less than a century; just as we have recapitulated the industrial history of the race during the same brief interval, passing through the pastoral, agricultural, commercial, and manufacturing phases of development. The author referred to describes his uncivilized couple as inhabiting a place of shelter somewhat analogous to the mia-mia of the Australian aboriginal, while the dawn of civilization in constructive art is signalized by the Aryan edifice and its appurtenances, the one a stable and cowshed, the other a sort of barn and granary. Such also were the primitive structures erected by the early settlers in Australia, and more especially by those who ventured into the interior, occupied large areas of land for pasturage, and laid the foundation of the great wool-producing industry of these colonies. To shelter themselves from the fierce heat of the summer sun and winds, and from the tropical downpour of the winter rains, and to sleep securely from the stealthy attacks of the natives, were the first needs to be provided for. Trees were cut down and sawed or split into slabs, saplings served as a framework for the walls, sheets of bark supplied the material for the roof, a large open fireplace did duty for a kitchen range and an oven, and some casks, which had been emptied of their contents in the shape of bottled ale, and had had the ends knocked out of them, were transformed into a chimney. One or two sea-chests, an iron stretcher, a roughly-constructed table fashioned by an amateur carpenter, one or two brandy-cases metamorphosed into cupboards, a flour-barrel, a frying-pan, a gridiron made out of iron hoop, a few metal plates and pannikins, a "billy," some knives and forks, a pair of blankets, and perhaps an oppossum rug, constituted the plenishing of this primitive habitation, in which, perhaps, an ex-officer in the army, an emigrant who had graduated at one of the English universities, or the younger son of an old county family, cooked his own food, made his own bed, such as it was, and eat the former with an appetite, and slept upon the latter with a soundness, resulting from abundant exercise or strenuous labour in the open air, and productive of such robust health as made the mere consciousness of existence a blessing. Sometimes the bush hut had to be adapted to the exigencies of a family, and then its dimensions were enlarged. A visitor to Port Phillip in the year 1839 has thus described the habitation of a squatter who had previously held a commission as major in the Indian army:—"On the occasion of my first visit I was received by the Major in a long narrow apartment which extended the entire length of the hut; subsequent investigation proved that it was the solitary room of the establishment, and was at different times of the day used for the various purposes of drawing, dining, and bed-room. . . . At the upper end of the long apartment, which was lighted by two small windows, stood a large curtainless four-post bed, flanked by one or two small shake-downs, or camp bedsteads, dimly visible in a dark recess. The other end of the room was devoted to social purposes, and was adorned with a large dining-table and some chairs, which were placed in close proximity to a huge bush fireplace, occupying nearly the whole width of the wall. So ample was the chimney, that it would have easily accommodated the whole family. The good Major, who was not troubled with any mauvaise honte, was as hospitable as though he had been the inmate of a palace." The guest chamber of this "family mansion" was a rudely-constructed kitchen, containing a "number of berths (or bunks) arranged ship-fashion round the dark walls."

To the slab-hut and the log-cabin succeeded the weather-board cottage, with its shingle roof, immovable windows without weights and pulleys, its boarded floors and broad verandah, the more primitive hut serving as a detached kitchen for the new abode. And by this time, perhaps, its original unsightliness had been effectually hidden from view by a tangled mass of flowering creepers, which had had the effect of converting an ugly eyesore into a picturesque adjunct. Gradually, too, the verandah posts of the more recent edifice would be wreathed with a variety of climbing plants, which would thrust their prehensile tendrils along the eaves and form festoons of vivid colour and pleasant verdure. In time the shingle roof, alternately swollen by the winter rains and warped and shrunken by the summer sunshine, would require to be replaced by zinc or slate; the sashes in the principal apartments would be removed to make way for French windows, and a little judicious expenditure would give the habitation something of the aspect of a cottage ornée. Then as the family grew in numbers, and the prosperity of the settler increased, the erection of a substantial country house or mansion would be resolved upon, and the plans would make provision for a billiard-room, a ball-room, a smoking-room, with a double arcade running round three sides of the building, a spacious entrance-hall, opening into an atrium, surrounded by a gallery, and lighted from a lantern in the roof, and all the conveniences and luxuries demanded by civilized men and women in affluent or easy circumstances in the nineteenth century. A conservatory connected with the drawing-room, a fernery, and a lawn-tennis ground would constitute some of the appurtenances of the country mansion, which would have its flower-gardens, orchard, kitchen-garden, and shrubberies, and would reproduce some of the most characteristic features of the maisons de campagne of the Old World.

Such is a rapid sketch of the evolution of the country house in all parts of Australasia, and the description will apply equally to that of the suburban mansion, and with certain modifications to the great trading establishments in the principal cities. The foundation of many a business which afterwards assumed colossal proportions was laid in a small weather-board shop, situated in one of the principal thoroughfares of a future metropolis. Two pounds a foot frontage may have been paid for land which would now realize £1000 a foot, and a temporary structure cheaply erected of inexpensive materials would amply suffice for the limited transactions incidental to an infant settlement. But these would grow with the expansion of the latter. A two-storey edifice of brick would supplant the wooden shanty of the early days; and the time would arrive when a massive structure six or seven stories high, the upper stories let out in offices, and the lower resplendent with plate-glass and much carving and gilding, would obliterate all traces of the humbler structure of an intermediate period. And as with places of retail business in the principal cities, so with their town-halls, churches, banks, insurance offices, warehouses, hotels, theatres, club-houses, taverns, and Government offices. When Augustus boasted that he had found Rome built of brick, and would leave it constructed of marble, his vaunt scarcely referred to a more remarkable transformation than has been witnessed in the whole of the Australasian capitals within the memory of hundreds of men who would hardly like to be considered old. And what is everywhere noticeable is the solidity which characterizes the latest phase of civic and domestic architecture. The work is massive, and is intended to be enduring. It betokens prosperity in the present and confidence in the future; while the outlay, great as it frequently is, is felt to be justified by the experience of the past. The material progress of the various colonies during the last forty years has been something phenomenal, and yet in all probability it will be greatly exceeded during the next sixty.

Nor, in speaking of the progress of domestic architecture, must I omit to notice the application of decorative art to the interior of houses and public buildings. Ten years ago this kind of work was left to the paper-hanger exclusively. More recently it has become recognized as something demanding purely artistic treatment in conformity with the principles laid down by the best authorities on the subject, and arrived at by them after a careful study of the elements of variety, fitness, simplicity, and contrast, which go to make up the beautiful in nature. Fortunately for architects and house-owners, a decorative artist, who was a perfect master of his métier—Mr. Robert Reid, brother of the Scottish Academician—settled in these colonies about the time of the International Exhibitions in Sydney, Melbourne, and Adelaide, and awakened the minds of people belonging to the more prosperous classes of society to the fact that their houses were susceptible of being rendered much more attractive by means of decorative art. Two or three gentlemen of taste and discernment called Mr. Reid's services into requisition, with such gratifying results that their example was soon followed by others; and in process of time the erection of every new mansion almost presupposed its internal decoration as a natural sequence, so soon as the walls were fit to receive a coat of colour; and older habitations acquired a sort of youthful bloom at the skilful hands of that gentleman, or of those whom his success induced to copy his example. Other changes and improvements followed. It was perceived that there must exist a certain harmony between the decorations and the furniture, draperies, and ornaments of a room. And thus a demand arose for mobiliers of artistic design and execution, and here again the want called forth the artificer required, and a German cabinet-maker named Hitzler came forward, and proved his capacity to rival the best productions of similar handicraftsmen in London, Paris, and Vienna. The leading mercers in the various capitals of Australasia were prompt to import the choicest products of European looms for carpets, curtains, dados, and portières; the famous house of Thomas Webb and Sons opened branches for the sale of their exquisite glass and porcelain in Melbourne and Sydney; Japan poured her bronzes, Satsuma ware, ivory carvings, embroidered hangings, ceramics, and lacquer-ware into the auction-rooms of the chief cities; France, Germany, Italy, and Austria-Hungary were ransacked for objets d'art and bric-a-brac by an agent of the enterprising firm of Allen and Co. of Sydney and Melbourne; and the result at the present time is that a walk down the principal streets of either of these places offers to the eye of the wayfarer as many objects of interest in the shop-windows as he will meet with in the Rue de la Paix in Paris, or the Kalverstradt at Amsterdam, or the Corso Vittorio Emanuele in Milan, or the Kohlmarkt in Vienna. And the quality of the articles thus exposed for sale, speaking more particularly of those which are employed for ornamental purposes, is a pretty good index of the general character of the interiors they are destined to embellish. So too with regard to the pictures and engravings which find a market in the colonies. Proof impressions of line-engravings, etchings, and photogravures after the works of the best living masters in England and on the continent of Europe seem to find ready appreciation in this part of the world, as also do water-colour drawings by British, French, and Italian artists of repute. Oil paintings of a high character meet with less acceptance; but there might be recently seen in the gallery of a Melbourne dealer, Mr. A. Fletcher, genuine examples of Millais, Leader, Dupré, and other artists who have made themselves a European reputation. And it is certain that if an exhibition were to take place of works of art loaned by private collectors, and comprising the best oil paintings, water-colour drawings, and statuary in their possession, the result would be both a surprise and a gratification, while it would serve to show how liberal must have been the aggregate expenditure of the cultivated section of colonial society upon works of high art intended for decorative purposes.

THE THEATRE.

In all civilized communities the acted drama plays such an important part, both as a means of education and recreation, that its influence on the social development of a people is probably far more considerable than is ordinarily supposed. In some conditions of society it serves the purpose of a library, a lecture-hall, an art-gallery, and a school of morals and manners. The spectator obtains from it some knowledge of history, some insight into the springs of human action, some acquaintance with the manifold varieties of human character and conduct, some familiarity with the modes of thought and expression, with the costumes, usages, and habits of men and women at different epochs, some glimpses of pictorial art in the scenery of the theatre, and some idea of the beauty, the force, copiousness, and flexibility of his mother tongue in the dialogue of the play, especially if it be one of the masterpieces of the noblest dramatic literature in the world. Hence the rise and progress of the drama in all new countries may well be watched with special interest by those who are engaged in examining the causes which have contributed to their intellectual and material expansion. The first settlement of British subjects on the shores of what was then known as New Holland had not been formed more than eight years when the earliest theatrical representation took place. This was in the year 1796, the occasion being the celebration of the anniversary of the King's birthday. A temporary playhouse was erected for the occasion; the performers consisted of convicts; the Governor and his officers were placed upon the free list, while other persons were admitted on payment of one shilling per head; but as the coin of the realm was somewhat scarce in those days, the equivalent of the entrance-money was received in flour or rum. The play chosen for representation was The Recruiting Officer of Farquhar, a comedy as coarse in plot and dialogue as the novels of the eighteenth century; but the prologue written and spoken by Barrington, the pickpocket, was remarkable as containing two lines which have been as frequently quoted perhaps as any couplet from the works of Pope. They will be found below:—

> "From distant climes, o'er widespread seas, we come,
> But not with much éclat, or beat of drum.
> True patriots all, for be it understood,
> We left our country for our country's good.
> No private views disgraced our generous zeal,
> What urged our travels was our country's weal;
> And none can doubt but that our emigration
> Has proved most useful to the British nation."

Such was the curious commencement of the theatrical history of Australasia. Nor did many years elapse before a regular theatre was instituted in which dramatic performances were given at irregular intervals by professional actors and actresses. As a matter of course, the building in which these took place was of limited dimensions and fragile construction; more contracted and less commodious than the country barn in which the strolling players of Hogarth's days used to awe and charm their rustic audiences, when,

"Vagrants by law, to justice open laid,
They trembled, of the beadle's lash afraid,
And fawning, cringed for wretched means of life
To Madame May'ress or his Worship's wife."

Equally, of course, the company was composed of men and women with but moderate pretensions to histrionic ability—players who had emigrated from sheer incapacity to emerge from obscurity in the mother country, reinforced by two or three stage-struck amateurs, enamoured of rant and rapture, and eager

"To tread the stage and be in turn
The prince we honour and the knave we spurn;
Bravely to bear the tumult of the crowd,
The hiss tremendous, and the censure loud."

And the scenery and costumes of that primitive period were such as would scarcely be tolerated in the theatre of a remote diggings township; for the former was the work of a house-painter with some little knowledge of design, and consisted of the exterior of a castle belonging to no particular epoch, a forest in which the trees bore a striking resemblance to gigantic cabbages, the outside of a cottage, and an interior which did duty equally for the palatial apartment of the wicked baron and of the rural beauty against whose innocence he was weaving those subtle wiles which were eventually frustrated by the ingenuity or valour of a low comedian in a red wig and flowered waistcoat. The orchestra consisted of a flute, a violin, and a violoncello; the theatre was illuminated by tallow-candles which had to be snuffed at rapidly recurring intervals, and the occupants of the pit were seated upon wooden forms, while the people in the boxes were provided with rush-bottomed chairs. The roof of the building was pervious in places to the rain; and when a fierce north wind or a "southerly buster" was raging outside, the pleasure of the spectators was not a little qualified by apprehensions for their personal safety, as the frail structure shuddered and reeled under the shocks it received from the boisterous gale.

Before the discovery of gold, theatres had been established in Sydney, Melbourne, Geelong, Adelaide, Hobart, and Launceston, and possibly elsewhere in the colonies. But that event brought Australia prominently into notice at the other end of the world, and it was regarded as a country worth exploitering by professional people of considerable repute in Europe and the United States. Catherine Hayes, the vocalist, made the tour of the colonies and reaped a golden harvest; Miska Hauser, a Hungarian violinist, was equally successful; and Anna Bishop was the pioneer of Italian opera, the first entertainment of the kind having been given at the Princess's Theatre (since pulled down) in Melbourne. It was a polyglot performance, for one of the principals sang his part in Italian, another in German, another in French, another in Spanish, and another in English. People cared little for the libretto, however, but a great deal for the music; and, considering that a chorus had to be organized, drilled, and instructed, and that all sorts of difficulties had to be surmounted, the performance was a remarkably successful one. Among other professional visitors to the colonies in those early days were Miss Emma Stanley with her monological entertainment, Mr. Stephen Massett, Jacobs and Anderson the conjurors, the Backus Minstrels from New York, and Lola Montez, bent upon turning to pecuniary profit the notoriety she had acquired by her amours with the then King of Bavaria, and by the insurrection which had resulted in her expulsion from Munich. One of the most important events connected with the history of the drama in these colonies was the engagement by Mr. George Coppin in England of that famous actor the late G. V. Brooke, Miss Fanny Cathcart, and an efficient company, for a professional tour through the Australian colonies. Brooke was then in his prime, both physically and mentally. He had relinquished habits which had militated against his reputation in Great Britain, and the playgoers of this part of the world saw him play a round of Shaksperian characters more splendidly than he had ever done in London or Dublin. His genius as an actor seemed to blossom and expand under a Southern sky into the bright consummate flower of which the English public saw only the bud and afterwards the withering petals. Nature had been lavish of her gifts to him. Tall, well-knit, erect, symmetrically proportioned, with small hands and feet, eyes which could glow with passion and beam with humour, a voice strong, flexible, and melodious, clear as a bell and very sympathetic in its quality; the stately carriage of a prince, and a presence that filled the stage, this great actor, and the admirable company with which he was surrounded, created such a high standard of theatrical representation in these colonies, fully thirty years ago, that none of his successors have been able to surpass. The adjuncts and scenic illustrations of the drama have been more beautiful and picturesque in later years, but the performances of Brooke and his associates stand alone in the recollections of all who were privileged to witness them. It should be mentioned that previous to his advent, Mr. Edwin Booth and Miss Laura Keene had visited the colonies from the United States, but society was too much disorganized and excited at the time by the almost daily discoveries of gold to bestow upon those distinguished members of the profession the attention they deserved. The brilliant success of G. V. Brooke was the means of alluring many actors and actresses to Australia from the mother country and from America. Mr. Joseph Jefferson's genius received such enthusiastic recognition in these colonies as to induce him to challenge and obtain its endorsement by a London audience. Madame Celeste, Mr. Barry Sullivan, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kean, Mr. James Hudson, Sir William and Lady Don, Mr. James Anderson, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Matthews, Miss Avonia Jones, Madame Ristori, Miss Augusta Dargan, Mrs. Scott-Siddons, Mr. William Creswick, Miss Geneviève Ward, Signor and Signora Majeroni, and Dion Boucicault, are among the "stars" of the first and second magnitude that have glittered in the theatrical firmament. Nor is there probably any part of the world in which the expenditure of the people on this form of entertainment is so large, relatively to the population, as in the chief cities of Australasia; while it may be confidently asserted than in no English-speaking community is it so cheap to the classes from which it derives the bulk of its support. Sydney numbers three theatres, besides half a dozen halls available for musical or dramatic performances. Melbourne is furnished with six theatres and several halls. Adelaide, Brisbane, Hobart, Ballarat, and Sandhurst are also well furnished with places of public entertainment; and amateur dramatic clubs and associations are numerous in the colonies. Those who cater for the amusement of the public on the stage have agencies in England and America, whose business it is to secure new pieces of exceptional merit, and to enter into provisional engagements with actors and actresses, vocalists, and others who may possess the power of attracting the multitude inside their respective "shows." Indeed, no expense is spared in this respect, nor in the suitable mounting and illustration of plays and operas. Scenic artists of no mean ability are engaged for this purpose, and at the head of these stand two, Mr. George Gordon and Mr. John Hennings, who are qualified to hold their own with the best of their European compeers. In fact the writer, who is not unacquainted with similar work in most of the great theatres of the continent and of London, feels himself justified in asserting that the first of these two gentlemen has no superior as a scenic landscape artist.

MUSIC.

The cultivation of music in the various colonies belonging to this group commenced at a comparatively early period of their existence, and it could be scarcely more widely diffused than it is among all classes of society. This is a fact which impresses itself on the attention of foreign visitors more particularly. One of these, the Baron Michel, in a lecture delivered before the Société des Etudes Coloniales et Maritimes, in Paris, last year, remarked to his hearers, "You cannot imagine how widely disseminated is the pianoforte in Australia. I will not say that there is one on every floor, because most of the houses are of one story only, but certainly every village, every cottage, and, in short, every habitable dwelling possesses one if not two of these instruments. And, indeed, they are so prevalent that some mischievous wag proposed to give Sydney the name of Pianopolis." There may be a trace of exaggeration in this statement, but it is nevertheless substantially true; and you cannot walk through the suburbs of any of the chief centres of population in either of the colonies without being reminded of the gratifying fact that a pianoforte of some kind constitutes a portion of the furniture, not only of middle-class houses, but of the back parlours of small shopkeepers, and of the cottages of prosperous artisans. As a natural consequence, musical entertainments are extremely popular, and associations for promoting the study and practice of the divine art are exceedingly numerous in proportion to the population. In Sydney the Metropolitan Liedertafel numbers 400 subscribers and 60 performing members, and the Sydney Liedertafel 1000 subscribers, and 74 vocalists and 25 instrumentalists as performing members; while there is also an efficiently conducted Western Suburbs Musical Society. In Melbourne the Philharmonic Society has been in existence upwards of thirty years, and is one of the most important organizations of the kind in Australasia. It has an influential competitor in the Metropolitan Liedertafel, with which must be bracketed the Melbourne Liedertafel. In addition to these, there is the Musical Association of Victoria, the Tonic Sol-fa Association, the Continental Concert Society, and the Brighton, the Hawthorn and Kew, and the Toorak Harmonic Societies. Adelaide has its Deutsche Liedertafel, with 200 subscribers and 22 performing members; Hobart, its Philharmonic Society, its Orchestral Union, its Orpheus Club, its Liedertafel, and its Metropolitan, Reserve, and Rifle Bands. There are also five bands of music in Launceston. Brisbane has its Musical Union, with 300 subscribers, 86 practising and 20 auxiliary members; its Orchestral Society, its Liedertafel, and its South Brisbane Musical Society. Of similar musical associations in New Zealand we have no accessible record, but the inhabitants of that colony are certainly not behind those of the continent in their affection for and cultivation of the most refined and humanizing of the arts.

In the Town Hall, Melbourne, there has been erected, at the cost of £5000, an organ which Mr. Froude pronounces to be "one of the finest in existence"; and there is also a large one of local manufacture in the Exhibition Building. The new Town Hall in Sydney is to contain one which promises to exceed in power and magnitude that of the younger city; while the handsome structure which the citizens of Adelaide have erected as their Hotel de Ville, likewise contains a noble instrument procured from England about ten years ago.

A pretty good index to the prevalence of a popular taste for music is afforded by the fact that so many musicians of eminence have visited the Australasian colonies for the purpose of giving concerts in them, and generally speaking with satisfactory results to themselves. Miss Arabella Goddard, MM. Poussard and Doney, Henri Ketten, Wilhelmj, Kowalski, Remenyi, Köhler, Ley, Madeline Schiller, and Herr Pabst may be enumerated among those who have crossed the Equator in search of fame or fortune—some of them obtaining both—in these Southern lands. And the munificent gift of £20,000 by a private citizen, the Hon. Francis Ormond, for the foundation of a chair of music in the Melbourne University, is a splendid recognition of the importance of this form of culture as a branch of the higher education.

Some mention has already been made of the beginnings of opera in Australia. But its institution as a permanent source of enjoyment was due to the enterprise of Mr. F. S. Lyster, an Irish American gentleman who came hither from California about five and twenty years ago, bringing with him a well-organized and remarkably efficient company, together with a skilful conductor, for the performance of grand opera. He produced the masterpieces of Meyerbeer, Mozart, Rossini, Donizetti, Bellini, Gounod, Flotow, Verdi, Auber, Balfe, Wallace, Weber, and other composers upon the boards of the principal theatres in Australasia, with a completeness which may have been subsequently equalled, but has certainly not been surpassed; and he contributed in no unimportant degree to raise the taste of the play-going public in many instances, to educate it in some, and to provide an intellectual form of entertainment for all. The news of his success, from a financial point of view, induced some speculative managers in Italy to engage a specifically Italian company of lyric artists for a professional tour through the Australian colonies, and the result was a succession of operatic performances which, if they did not reach the high standard of great European capitals, were such as to satisfy all reasonable expectations. Indeed the lighter productions of Rossini and Donizetti were interpreted as efficiently as they could have been in Milan of Naples; while wandering stars like Ilma di Murska and Carlotta Patti, with other vocalists of lesser note, occasionally made their appearance in the principal concert-rooms of the colonies.

As a private accomplishment, there is no art more popular than music throughout the whole of Australasia, and the quantity of musical instruments and the amount of sheet music imported, to say nothing of the pianos and organs locally manufactured, as well as the number of qualified persons engaged in tuition, would be found, on examination, to reach a total that is literally astonishing, when regard is had to the limits of the population.

OUT OF DOOR SPORTS.

Very rapid and very remarkable has been the development which every kind of out of door recreation has undergone in these countries. To this result many causes have conduced. Ours is a sport-loving race. Racing, hunting, coursing, rowing, shooting, cricket, and angling have been from time immemorial the favourite pastimes of our fellow-countrymen in the British Islands. No season of the year has been without its appropriate pleasure in the field or on the race-course, by the river side or in the cricket-field, amidst the stubble or on the breezy downs. The taste for these things was not relinquished when the pioneers of settlement crossed the ocean, and followed the occupation of Abraham and Lot on the plains of Australia. On the contrary, the fondness for field sports seemed to gather strength and become more deeply rooted than ever in the minds and habits of the colonists. Then, again, the climate helped to foster and stimulate the desire for such recreations. So many hours were necessarily spent in the open air, and so much necessary work had to be performed on horseback, that the race and the chase seemed naturally to interweave themselves with the daily business of life. Finally, the circumstances of the great bulk of the community were so much easier than those of the corresponding classes in the old country, that they could afford to dedicate half a day a week to out of door recreations, and to lay aside altogether their ordinary occupations if an important horse-race, cricket match, regatta, or football contest presented sufficient attractions to draw them to the scene of competition. An interesting narrative might be written with respect to the growth of racing in these colonies, beginning with the first meeting at which a few weedy "scrubbers" were entered for a few prizes of insignificant amount, and were ridden by young bushmen over a roughly-defined course, in the presence of two or three hundred spectators, while all the adjuncts of the scene were as homely as they were unpicturesque, and ending with a description of the spectacle now presented at Flemington upon Cup-day, when a hundred thousand persons are gathered together, many of them from places one, two, and even three thousand miles apart, and when the result of the great event of the day is telegraphed simultaneously over tens of thousands of miles of wire, and along submarine cables to every station on the continent of Australia, in Tasmania, and in the islands of New Zealand. At the present time there is scarcely a city or town of importance in the whole of these colonies without its race-course, its annual half-yearly or quarterly meetings, and its racing clubs. Large sums of money are expended in the purchase, breeding, rearing, and training of racing stock, and the quality of this is sufficiently attested by performances which prove that both as regards speed and staying power it is on a level with the best in the world. As regards speed, Australasian horses, bred from imported sires and dams, have beaten the best records for distance to be met with in the annals of the English turf, the mile having been run in 1 minute 40 seconds by Boolka; and their staying power was exemplified by the achievement of Commotion in 1882-83, when the Champion Stakes were carried off by that horse, and the distance, three miles, was covered in 5 minutes 26 seconds. Were it not for the difficulties and risk attending the conveyance of valuable horses over sea to Europe, there is little doubt that Australasian competitors would have been entered ere this for the blue riband of the English turf and for the Grand Prix at Paris. In point of race-courses, that of Flemington is admittedly one of the best to be found in any part of the globe. Nature seems to have designed it expressly for the object which it now fulfils. Perfectly flat, spacious in area, and partially surrounded by an amphitheatre of hills, the spectacle it presents on the great holiday of the year is something unique, because there is an entire absence in that vast assemblage of anything betokening poverty, while the arrangements of the Victoria Racing Club, which stands at the head of all similar associations in the colonies, backed up by the judicious and liberal expenditure of a princely revenue, are simply perfect; whether as regards the means of access and departure, or the accommodation of so great a concourse of spectators as is drawn together on this particular occasion. There are three race meetings in the year at Flemington, besides a steeple-chase meeting, and as many at Caulfield, under the auspices of the Victoria Amateur Turf Club, as also the Geelong Racing Club. The Australian Jockey Club in Sydney holds three meetings a year at Randwick; and besides this influential association, there are the Tattersall's Club, the Sydney Turf Club, the Hawkesbury Race Club, and the Murrumbidgee Turf Club, all in New South Wales, without reckoning smaller organizations of a similar kind in country districts. The principal racing societies in Queensland are the Turf Club, holding three and sometimes four meetings a year in Brisbane, the Tattersall's Club in the same city, the Townsville Turf Club, the Rockhampton Jockey Club, the Mackay Turf Club, the Balonne Jockey Club, the Gympie Turf Club, and the Toowoomba Turf Club; and there are as many as forty minor racing clubs registered under the rules of the Queensland Turf Club. Tasmania has two such organizations: the one, the Tasmanian Racing Club, holding its meetings on a beautiful course at Elwick, sometimes called "The Goodwood of the Australias"; and the other, the Tasmanian Turf Club, having its races at Mowbray, a little more than two miles out of Launceston. Western Australia has its Turf Club, as also have the more important cities of New Zealand.

Almost as a matter of course the descendants of an old sea-faring race take heartily to aquatic sports in the "Greater Britain" of the South, Sydney taking the lead in this respect. There are twenty-five vessels, mostly cutter rigged, on the register of the Royal Sydney Yacht Squadron, and twenty-one, all cutter rigged, on that of the Prince Alfred Yacht Club. Five regattas are held in the course of the year, and the spectacle presented by the waters of Port Jackson on these occasions is one of the most animated and picturesque that can be imagined. There are also twelve rowing clubs in connection with the city and its suburbs, and six in the country. There are two distinctively athletic clubs in Sydney, and two for the practice of Lacrosse exclusively.

There are twenty-six vessels on the register of the Victoria Yacht Club, which holds an annual regatta; and there are, besides, the Albert Park and the Trident Amateur Yacht Clubs, and as many as eighteen rowing clubs in and around Melbourne, formed for the purpose of taking this form of exercise on the river Yarra, the Albert Park Lake, the Salt-water River, or Hobson's Bay, seven of them having boat-houses of their own.

In South Australia the Holdfast Bay Yacht and Boat Club has seventeen vessels on its register; and the other aquatic associations in that colony are the Glenelg Yacht Club and the Port Adelaide Amateur Rowing Club. In Tasmania the Derwent Yacht Club numbers five, the Launceston Yacht Club eight, and the Derwent Sailing Boat Club twenty cutter-rigged vessels on their respective registers, while the Derwent Rowing Club has been formed to train and prepare crews for inter-colonial trials of strength and skill. Western Australia has also its Perth Yacht Club and its West Australian Rowing Club, having its station in the capital of that colony.

In the year 1878 was instituted an inter-colonial eight-oar contest, which from that time forward became an annual event, and is rowed alternate years in New South Wales and Victoria. It has been won three times by the former and five times by the latter colony.

Cricket and football likewise enjoy a perennial popularity among all classes of the community, and the former received an important and enduring impulse from the visit of the first All England Eleven, organized twenty years ago by Messrs. Spiers and Pond, who at a later period made themselves a name and fortune as caterers of refreshments to the people of London and to railway travellers generally. Pitted for the first time against competitors from the Old World, the Australian bowlers, batters, and fielders discovered both their strength and their weakness. They remedied their defects and improved their good qualities, and from that time forward there has been a succession of cricketing tournaments on the green sward, picked teams from these colonies visiting England during the summer months, while the mother country has sent some of her best players, both gentlemen and professionals, to try their skill against the Australians during what is the winter season in the other hemisphere. Cricket-grounds, likewise available for football matches, are even more numerous than race-courses, in the neighbourhood of the large cities more particularly so; and a concourse of from 20,000 to 25,000 people at one of these popular places of resort near Sydney or Melbourne is no unfrequent occurrence on Saturday afternoons all the year round.

"Cricket," as a clever writer has observed, "is the colonial carrière ouverte aux talents. As Napoleon's soldiers remembered that they carried a marshal's bâton in their knapsacks, so the young Australians all remember that they have a chance of becoming successors of that illustrious band of heroes who have recently (i. e. in 1882) conquered the mother country (in the cricket-field) and looted her into the bargain." The sport is one which can be pursued in Victoria, Tasmania, and New Zealand for something like eight months in the year, and its popularity is universal. Even the aborigines have taken to it as heartily as the "pale faces," and a coloured eleven which visited the mother country in 1868 won as many games as they lost in Great Britain. The practice of playing inter-colonial matches between New South Wales and Victoria commenced in 1856, and has been continued annually ever since, the former colony winning sixteen and the latter twenty of these contests, which take place alternately in Sydney and Melbourne. South Australia entered into a similar trial of skill with Victoria in the cricket-field in 1874, and out of the nine matches played between them, Melbourne has been successful in five and Adelaide in four.

The first coursing-match in these colonies took place in 1873, when the Australian Waterloo Cup was run for, under the auspices of the Victoria Racing Club; and three years later, when the acclimatization of the hare had rendered it practicable, the New South Wales Coursing Club established a series of similar contests. No expense was spared by the lovers of the sport in either colony to procure greyhounds with the best of genealogies; and at the present time it is believed that these animals, although they may be equalled, can scarcely be excelled in any part of Great Britain, whether as regards speed, purity of lineage, or symmetry of form.

SAVINGS OF THE PEOPLE.

One of the most important auxiliaries to the social development of a community is the prevalence of habits of frugality, and the extent to which these are practised can be satisfactorily tested by official statistics; for if the annual savings of a people are considerable, while at the same time a high standard of living is maintained, it is a convincing proof that they are living within their means, and are steadily augmenting their reserve of capital available for reproductive investment. As regards the aggregate deposits in the banking institutions of the Australasian colonies, amounting in round numbers to £85,000,000, it is necessary to remark that these include large sums placed there by British capitalists, and that it would be quite impossible to determine how much of this total has been thus loaned from abroad, and how much is owned by local depositors; but the following figures furnished by the actuary to the Melbourne Savings Bank serve to show that on the 31st of December 1885 there were 480,232 depositors in the various savings banks of Australasia, and that they had £12,376,426 standing to their credit. And in the whole of the colonies there has been a notable increase in this respect during the last two years, as will be seen by the following table, which shows the number of depositors in each colony for the period in question:—

	Total No. of Depositors.
	June 30, 1883.	Dec. 31, 1885.	Increase.
New South Wales	66,604	107,515	40,911
Victoria	137,093	176,537	39,444
New Zealand	69,966	83,497	13,531
South Australia	46,388	54,474	8,086
Queensland	26,642	36,175	9,533
Tasmania	17,231	19,952	2,721
Western Australia	1,904	2,082	178

Turning to the total amount of deposits held in each of the colonies, we have the following interesting comparison:—

TOTAL AMOUNT OF DEPOSITS.

	June 30, 1883.	Dec. 31, 1885.	Increase.
New South Wales	£2,805,855	£3,484,460	£678,605
Victoria	2,818,435	3,409,266	590,831
New Zealand	1,687,738	2,091,896	404,158
South Australia	1,500,248	1,598,901	98,653
Queensland	1,086,685	1,340,254	253,569
Tasmania	380,343	424,620	44,277
Western Australia	24,838	27,026	2,188

But still larger sums are invested and deposited in the various building societies, friendly societies, and other provident institutions, besides what is annually laid out in the purchase of land and in the erection of habitations by the working and middle classes in all the colonies.

HOSPITALITY.

The hospitality exercised in the Australian colonies has become almost proverbial. Its practice dates back to a very early period, and its development has proceeded, pari passu, with the growth of society and the expansion of population. To the first settlers, naturally enough, the arrival of a visitor with a letter of introduction or some other voucher of respectability was a welcome event. It was a break in the monotony of their daily lives, a new face, a fresh voice, an acceptable addition to the little circle in its isolation, a contributor of novel ideas and later information to the common stock; and if the guest happened to possess more than average intelligence, pleasantness of manner, and geniality of character, every effort was made to prolong his visit, and to render his stay as agreeable to him as was compatible with the limited resources at command. And when the hour of leave-taking had arrived, he was passed on, if he so desired it, to another home-station, and could thus spend a year or two, if he thought proper, beneath the roofs of a succession of hospitable entertainers. The fare was often primitive and the accommodation was sometimes rough, but the cordiality of the welcome largely compensated for defects of this kind, and plenty of equestrian exercise on trusty bush horses in the open air made the hard mattress or the canvas stretcher seem as soft as a "thrice-driven bed of down." Foreign tourists in Australia and New Zealand have been especially impressed by the unaffected warmth of the greeting everywhere accorded to them, the unreserved freedom with which they were admitted into the domestic circle of their host and hostess, and the simple elegance which they found prevailing in households situated at remote distances from even the smaller centres of civilization. When a Spaniard tells you that he places his house and everything that it contains at your disposal, he is merely repeating a time-honoured formula, which expresses much but means very little. But an Australian colonist who begs of you to make yourself quite at home under his roof means all he says, and wishes it to be taken au pied de la lettre. He is unaffectedly glad to see you, pleased to show you every attention in his power, and gratified by your falling into easy and unceremonious relations with your new surroundings. Nor is the hospitable sentiment confined to any particular class of society. It pervades and animates all. It springs in part from cheerfulness of temperament and sociability of feeling, and in part from prosperous circumstances. Nature and human industry have combined to make the Australasian colonies a land of plenty. The small economics, the calculations, the anxious forethought, and the self-denial which have to be practised by the great bulk of the community in Europe are almost unknown in countries where abundance is the rule and privation is the rare exception, and hence a liberal hospitality can be indulged in without preliminary frugality or subsequent parsimony; and the officers of many a foreign ship of war, visiting the ports of Australasia, have afterwards declared that in no part of the world have they met with a more generous reception or experienced such a succession of spontaneous and unremitting kindnesses as in this Southern land. In an official report presented to the Minister of Marine at Rome by Captain Cesare Romano, Commandant of the royal transport ship Europa, which visited these shores at the time of the International Exhibitions in Sydney and Melbourne, occurs the following remarkable reference to the subject under treatment: "Even if I possessed the pen of a De Amicis, and if the scope of this report permitted me to do so, I should have the greatest difficulty in conveying a distant idea of the cordial, generous, grandiose, and splendid hospitality which we all enjoyed in Melbourne. The German, British, French, Dutch, and Italian squadrons anchored in these waters during the period of the Exhibition can never forget the hospitality with which they were received. The citizen of Melbourne builds his house, conducts his life, regulates his affairs, having always before him the duty of hospitality. I never entered a habitation in that city which had not its apartments for visitors, more commodious and better furnished than those of the heads of the household. And this perhaps is partly owing to the fact that a large section of the population of Victoria reside upon their estates at a distance from cities, and when they come down to Melbourne they all regard it as a duty to entertain and to recreate themselves for a few months after the hard life of the country. Perhaps, also, as some persons contend, the inhabitants of the capital are so largely hospitable rather to display their wealth than out of pure cordiality. Be this as it may, of one thing I am certain, that in Melbourne no gentleman will fail to find a hundred houses open to him, and a hundred families well pleased to receive him as their guest. . . I might write volumes upon this special characteristic of its population without succeeding in giving even an approximate idea of it; but this I will say, that during a twelvemonth's stay in Melbourne I never grew accustomed to it, and that every day increased my wonder at it." But what this observant foreigner has recorded of one capital is equally true of nearly all, and especially so of Sydney and Adelaide. In the former city one of the favourite methods of entertaining visitors of note is by invitation to a picnic, for which the lovely scenery surrounding the capital of New South Wales offers such a plentitude of delightful sites; while in the hottest of the summer months it is easy to make an excursion to the Blue Mountains, where al fresco fêtes can be held in the midst of landscapes of surpassing beauty, enveloped in an atmosphere of delicious coolness and aromatic fragrance. In Victoria and Tasmania similar parties are made up for a few hours of out-of-door enjoyment in the moist and shadowy fern-tree gullies to be met with on the slopes of most of the mountain ranges. As to "the hard life of the country," that has become a thing of the past in all the settled districts of Australasia in so far as the opulent classes of society are concerned, although it has still to be confronted on sheep-stations and cattle-runs lying far inland. As an illustration of country hospitality, we may cite one other foreign writer, M. Desiré Charnay, who visited Australia about seven years ago, on a scientific mission confided to him by the French Minister of Public Instruction. During his stay in Queensland he was invited to visit the residence of Mr. Gregory, a squatter on the Darling Downs, where, he says, "I received that proverbial hospitality which makes Australia such a blessed country for the foreigner; and I found in the abode to which I was welcomed a luxury of good taste, a refinement of accommodation which was a constant source of surprise to me. The words 'desert' and 'civilization' naturally exclude each other in our European heads; and the contrast is so striking! Pass that gate, cross that park, and before you arises a magnificent cottage with its flower-beds and its creepers festooning a spacious verandah. Children are playing about; a charming lady in a toilette of the latest fashion advances to greet you; and the sonorous notes of a piano denote the presence of young girls. You enter: everything is beautiful, brilliant, and becoming—pictures, books, flowers—flowers everywhere. 'Dinner is served!'—it is the voice of a servant in livery, erect, dignified, and in perfect form. You offer your arm to the hostess, and take your place at a table equipped with a dinner-service in excellent taste, glittering with lustrous glass, and adorned above all with flowers. Flowers are the great coquetry of the Australians; they overflow the table, they float on the surface of the water in your finger-glass, and mother and daughter wear them on their corsage and in their hair. You almost fancy yourself in London, and you are all the more readily inclined to believe so when, on rising from the table, a handsome calèche drawn by two fast trotters awaits you, the footman at the door and the coachman on the box. You set out, and are presently in the wilderness; for if you have it not close to the gate, it is only five, ten, or thirty miles distant."

In fact the "stately homes" of Australia are scattered over the whole of the settled districts of the continent and the islands of Tasmania and New Zealand, and they are most of them centres of hospitality which is assuming year by year a character of greater elegance and refinement, so that the visitor from Europe experiences considerable difficulty in realizing that he is a sojourner in homes that have been created within the last ten, twenty, thirty, or forty years.

Nor can we quit this subject without quoting the remark made by Mr. Froude upon referring to the attentions paid to him in Sydney as elsewhere:—"The 'glory of hospitality' which Camden speaks of as in his time decaying in England, has revived among the colonists." The historian, it must be remembered, had many opportunities of verifying the truth of his assertion; and from the records of his travel in Australia we may venture to borrow one passage for the sake of the light it throws on the theme we are at present endeavouring to illustrate. Near a Victorian gold-field he visited what he designates as "an English aristocrat's country house reproduced in another hemisphere, and shone upon at night by other constellations. Inside, the illusion was even more complete. . . . We found a high-bred English family—English in everything except that they were Australian born, and cultivated perhaps above the English average—bright young ladies, well, but not over-dressed; our host, their father, polite, gracious, dignified; our hostess with the ease of a grande dame. Two young English lords on their travels were paying a visit there, and had been up the country kangaroo shooting. Good pictures hung round the rooms. Books, reviews, newspapers—all English—and the latest publications were strewed about the tables—the Saturday, the Spectator, and the rest of them. The contrast between the scene which I had expected and the scene which I found took my breath away. . . . I, for one, left the place with the feeling that I would gladly have remained a little longer among such pleasant friends and such charming surroundings." Ex uno disce omnes. Such homes may be reckoned by the hundred in Australia, Tasmania, and New Zealand, and the hospitality extended to the author of Oceana differed but little in warmth and heartiness from that which greets every visitor whose credentials entitle him to the confidence and respect of those who receive him as their guest.

CONCLUSION.

We have thus examined in detail the numerous and complex items which go to make up the sum of the social development of this group of colonies. So far as the oldest of them is concerned, that development has been the work of about a century. As regards most of the others, it has been carried out in less than half that time. Perhaps we shall not be claiming too much in assuming that it has been mainly accomplished within the lifetime of a single generation, and that the era of modern progress in Australasia dates from the commencement of steam navigation between the old country and the new. Since then the distance between the two has been virtually lessened, in so far as intercommunication is concerned, to the extent of one-third; while the submarine cable brings us within a few hours of each other. Thirty years ago men and women migrated to Australia in search of health or fortune with something of the feeling that they were going into exile, and that they must relinquish many of the comforts, most of the social enjoyments, and nearly all the luxuries which had been accessible "at home." That sentiment has pretty well died out. There is nothing in any of the principal cities of Australasia to remind the new-comer that he is in a new country, except the absence of antiquities, the brightness of the atmosphere, the general air of vivacity and alertness which characterizes the people he meets with in the streets, and the non-appearance of the squalor and mendicancy which obtrude themselves upon your notice in the centres of population in Europe, and even in many of the larger cities in the United States. The stranger strolls along the principal thoroughfares of an Australian capital, and he sees the latest Paris fashions in the windows of the linen-drapers and silk-mercers, the newest books on the counters of the booksellers, the most elegant novelties in bijouterie in the glass cases of the jewellers, as if he were in the Palais Royal, or in the Piazza di Spagna at Rome. From Staffordshire, from Sèvres, from Meissen, from Limoges, Dresden, Vienna, and Florence have been drawn the beautiful articles in glass and ceramic ware which adorn the windows of the dealers in these articles. English and French looms send the choicest of their carpets and hangings to colonial agents. The best pianoforte makers in Europe and the United States consign their most expensive instruments to the Australian music-seller; artistic furniture and bric-a-brac is also imported from the most famous cabinet-makers in the old world, besides being equally well fabricated in Sydney, Melbourne, and other cities; and the new arrival soon makes the discovery that there is scarcely anything money can buy that is not as readily procurable at one end of the world as at the other. He sees carriages as well built and horses as stately and well-groomed as the average of those he has been accustomed to look at in Rotten Row, or in the Bois de Boulogne, or Unter den Linden. A waggonette or a hansom is always within hail if he wishes to make a call; while omnibuses or tram-cars run at rapid intervals to all the suburbs of Sydney, Adelaide, Dunedin, and Melbourne, where the cable trams are perfect. On inquiry he will learn that there are upwards of 7500 miles of railway in operation in Australia, Tasmania, and New Zealand, a total equal to more than half the mileage of the iron road in England and Wales, which have nine times the population of Australasia; and that there are 57,174 miles of telegraph at work in the whole of these colonies, being considerably more than double the number of miles sufficing for the more compact territory of the United Kingdom; while the three millions of people in the former annually send no less than 7,235,000 messages as against the 31,400,000 messages sent by the thirty-six millions of people in the United Kingdom. These figures will serve to denote the activity of social and commercial intercourse among the population of Australasia, which is still further exemplified by the business of the post-offices in the various colonies composing this group. There are 4830 of these, and the returns for 1884 show that they received and despatched 138,103,105 letters and post-cards and 72,974,932 newspapers during that year.

In conclusion, let us quote from Mulhall's Dictionary of Statistics, a work whose authority is fully recognized in the mother country, some figures which exhibit the prosperity of the Australian colonies relatively to that of other countries, and these may be left in each instance to speak for themselves.

THE SCENERY OF AUSTRALASIA.

A few words in reference to the scenery of the Australasian colonies may not form an inappropriate pendant to what has been written with respect to their social development, inasmuch as the external aspects of nature count for something in the formation of national character, and modern science has shown how largely man is influenced by his physical environments.

Generally speaking, the first impressions formed of Australian scenery as a stranger approaches the shores of this continent are unfavourable. But these disappear if he sails into Port Jackson, or if he penetrates into the interior of the colonies on the mainland. Within a few miles of Adelaide rises the Mount Lofty Range, from the summit of which you overlook such a magnificent view as has been compared to that of the Rhine from the heights near Schwalbach. Within an hour and a half's ride of the capital of Victoria are the Macedon and Dandenong Ranges, covered with timber, and seamed with perennial streams that hurry downwards to the valleys beneath through cool dark cloisters composed of graceful fern-trees. These mountains and others that rise to the northward and eastward of the latter abound with picturesque gullies, and are as beautiful in their way as the Apennines, while they command prospects as extensive as those in Tuscany. The western district of Victoria with its lakes, its Grampians and Pyrenees, and the north-eastern with its Bogong Ranges, are also rich in the elements of romantic beauty. In New South Wales the loveliness of Sydney Harbour, with its innumerable bays, coves, and inlets, framed in amphitheatres of foliage, has passed into a proverb. It would be difficult to exaggerate the special claim of the Blue Mountains, accessible by a railway which is a triumph of engineering, or to overpraise the scenery of the Hawkesbury River, which the late Anthony Trollope pronounced to be superior to that of the Rhine. The island of Tasmania has been appropriately called "the garden of Australia," and it combines many of the characteristics of Sicily with the verdure of Devonshire and the Isle of Wight. The valley of the Tamar in the north will remind the visitor of that through which the Plym flows, and the Esk will recall that part of it near the Dewerstone; while the valley of the Derwent presents points of resemblance to the valley of the Wye in Monmouthshire. In other parts of the island noble chains of mountains, and lakes encircled by hills clothed with timber to the water's edge, offer an unlimited choice of subjects to the landscape painter.

It is, however, in New Zealand that nature has brought together some of the grandest of her creations, and has bestowed upon this "Great Britain of the South," as Sir Robert Peel named it, the characteristics of Switzerland, Iceland, and Norway. Following the western coast line of the South Island, a chain of towering mountains, upwards of 200 miles long, and reaching an altitude in one place of 13,200 feet, stretches from north to south, collecting and congealing the vapours that are borne inland from the sea, and transforming them into snow and ice. From the slopes of Mount Cook and the adjoining peaks, five large glaciers—one of them eighteen miles long and nearly two miles broad—stretch in an easterly and south-easterly direction towards the valleys below, and feed a multitude of lakes and rivers, which empty themselves into the sea on the east coast. On the one side of this vast spine, as it were, the line of perpetual snow is only 6500, and on the other 7500 feet above the sea-level; and in one place, the Franz Joseph glacier, sheltered from the sun's rays by the towering bulk of Mount de la Beche, actually descends to within 705 feet of the sea-level. Many of the lakes, which owe their origin to the melting of the glaciers, have a mean altitude of from 1000 to 2000 feet, and bosomed as they are amidst mountains massive in structure, ever varying in outline, and as changeful in colour, they rival in beauty if not in extent the most famous of the Swiss lakes. In what is known as the Lake District of New Zealand, there are twelve of these sheets of water of the first magnitude, which naturally fall into five groups. Lake Wakatipu, which is fifty-two miles long, and covers an area of upwards of 110 square miles, is shaped something like the letter S. Its depth averages 1200 feet; and it is dominated by seven mountain peaks, each of which rises to an altitude of 8000 feet. Lake Wanaka is less extensive, but its surroundings are much grander; for you may count from it about thirty named and measured peaks from 4000 to nearly 10,000 feet high, and a countless number that have been neither named nor measured. This is only separated by a mountain ridge from Lake Hawea, fifteen miles long and three broad. The other lakes bearing the native names of Pouteriteri, Hakapoua, Hauroto, Monawai, Manapouri, Te Anau, Ohahu, Pukaki, and Tekapo, have the same characteristics, and do not call for special description. But the special glory of New Zealand consists in its marvellous Sounds. These are thirteen in number, the grandest of all being Milford Sound. You enter it through a narrow but Titanic gateway, that looks as if it had been cut through the towering and perpendicular rocks by the slow grinding action of a glacier continued through an unimaginable series of eons, and find yourself in a lake of irregular outline about half a mile wide, walled round by precipitous mountains, four, five, six, and seven thousand feet high, whose peaks and fissures are faithfully mirrored in the depths of the placid water. Far back in the awful recesses of these grim warders of the Sound, you catch glimpses of fields of ice and drifts of frozen snow. Innumerable waterfalls leap from projecting crags at various heights, and one makes a plunge of 470 feet into the seemingly unfathomable gulf below. After a heavy shower the circumscribing mountains seem to bleed at every pore. Cataracts start forth in all directions, and the dark background causes them to resemble threads of silver lacing the majestic slopes and shoulders of the mountains. But language is literally powerless to describe with anything approaching adequacy the unique and matchless beauty of the Sounds which indent the West Coast of New Zealand.

In the North Island a tremendous convulsion of nature has recently destroyed, in a few hours, the Pink and White Terraces, which were considered the tenth wonder of the world. But the whole district in which they were situated, and from which they have disappeared with such appalling suddenness, abounds in features of interest alike to the geologist and the artist. For some distance the Waikato river flows through a volcanic region teeming with hot springs, geysers, and fumaroles, and with terraces of silica, which are being gradually disintegrated by the action of the atmosphere. Hot cascades fall into the river from basins overflowing with boiling water. Columns of steam rise into the air from small craters filled with seething mud; and fountains spring upward with fantastic intermission and varying vehemence. Dr. Hochstetter tells us that he counted seventy-six points at which boiling water-basins were visible, without being able to survey the whole region. Speaking of the Puia Tuhi-tarata, he says: "The discharge from a basin full of sky-blue shining water forms a steaming over strata of silicious deposits shelving off in terraces towards the river, and varying in the gaudiest colours, white, red, and yellow. The same scene recurs five or six times up the river; and intermediate there are points exhibiting periodical eruptions, in some places every five, at others every ten, minutes."

Then, there is Lake Taupo in the midst of a veritable wonder-land, with the Geyser Hollow at Wairakei; the rapids and cataract of Huka; and the slumbering volcano of Tongariro, 6500 feet high, all within easy distance; to say nothing of the bitter lake of Rotokawa, the Gorge of Waikato, the Witches' Cauldron, and the beautiful valley known as Glen Lifley. In fact it may be safely asserted that in no part of the world can the tourist find so much to charm and interest him within the limits of two islands containing an area somewhat less than that of Great Britain and Ireland, as in New Zealand.
